This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world’s books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that’s often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book’s long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google’s system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google “watermark” you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can’t offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book’s appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google’s mission is to organize the world’s information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world’s books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/
THE PURGATORY
OF
DANTE ALIGHIERI
EDITED WITH TRANSLATION AND NOTES

BY ARTHUR JOHN BUTLER
LATE FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE CAMBRIDGE

London
MACMILLAN AND CO.
1880
PREFACE.

Considering the enormous number of translations and editions which the "Divine Comedy" has already undergone at the hands of fifteen or more generations, it would seem to be only decent that a fresh one should offer some apology for its existence. The best, perhaps, is that suggested by Sainte-Beuve: "Lire Dante," he says, "et le lire de près, c'est presque inévitablement désirer de le traduire, c'est entrer dans les replis de son génie, et après y avoir pénétré (ce qui demande tout un effort), c'est concevoir la pensée d'y introduire les autres." Without pretending to the hardihood, so characteristic of the writer's nation, which talks easily of penetrating into the recesses of Dante's genius, the present translator may admit that some such idea as that indicated in the above passage was what first suggested the task he has undertaken. There are, indeed, sundry signs which go to show that of late years the serious study of Dante's great poem is beginning to make its way in this country. Formerly, the "Inferno" was read in its entirety, or oftener in fragments, by young people who were learning Italian; and then they went on to read a little Ariosto, a little Tasso, and so on, till they were considered to be "finished." Very few, it may be imagined, ever looked into the "Purgatorio;" almost none ventured on the "Paradiso." Indeed, the second and third Canticles must have occupied much the same position in the opinion of critics as is held by "Paradise Regained." Thus Sismondi decides that the interest falls off in the second part of the poem: he seems to look back with regret to the "horror of great darkness," varied only by the diverse torments of Hell. In the lively hope which animates "the folk secure of beholding the light on high," he can see only a lack of emotion resulting in frigidity; and even the visions and dreams, important as they are to the understanding of the Cantica, seem to him adapted only to awaken the impatience of the reader, in haste to get to the end of the story. The taste of the present generation, less attracted by strong colouring than by delicate and subtle touches, and inclining, in its best mood, rather to reticence than to violent expression of the feelings, keenly sensitive moreover to the influence of external nature in its various aspects, has, as might be expected, appreciated more justly the merits of the second division of the poem. Thus, Mr. Symonds ("Study of Dante," chap. v. § 12), directly traversing Sismondi's criticism, points out how full of human interest are the meetings with Casella, Sordello, Statius, and many others. How full, to multiply instances, of a gentle and playful humour are such touches as the by-play which goes on between Virgil and Dante when Statius, not knowing to whom he speaks, expresses his admiration of the "Æneid," and his longing to behold its author; or Belacqua's "Hai ben veduto;" or Oderisi's "E mio in parte." How dramatic again Nino's slightly contemptuous mention of "the Milanese," for whom his widow, while retaining his name, has forsaken his memory; or Hugh Capet's bitter invective against his unworthy descendants. This is in fact only what we might have expected to find in this part of the poem. Absolute evil, no less than absolute good, is so utterly unlike anything of which our experience of human nature enables us to form a conception, that the attempt to represent it in concrete forms must in proportion to its very success fail to touch our sympathies. Francesca, Peter de Vineis, Brunetto, Guy of Montefeltro, even Ulysses, move us not so much by awe at their terrible fate, or horror at the sins which earned it, as by the traits which show how much of noble and gentle feeling still remains to them in the midst of torments and despair. Ugolino, it may safely be said, awakens in the majority of readers far more of pity for his cruel death than of loathing for the crimes which that death was insufficient to expiate. In Purgatory we find human nature, in a purified form doubtless, but in kind exactly as we know it among those of our fellow-men with whom we are most in sympathy. The pleasures of memory and the pleasures of hope alike are there, while the present discomfort, or even pain, is just as in this life fully alleviated by both the one and the other. The more thoroughly the reader knows the whole poem, the less hesitation will he have in endorsing the opinion of Balbo, that the "Purgatory" "è forse in tutto la più bella parte della Divina Commedia, o quella almeno dove meglio si dimostra la più bella parte dell' anima di Dante." So too Father Perez of Verona, in his excellent and elaborate study: "I sette Cerchi del Purgatorio di Dante," while admitting that the "Inferno," with its more salient points of interest, is most attractive on a first reading, contends that, "le anime studiose delle più delicate e riposte bellezze morali fan principalmente loro delizia del Purgatorio." Those who like movement, however aimless, provided that it be violent, will, he thinks, admire the "Inferno;" while those who prefer a constant progress, moral and intellectual, will find what they seek, and an example as well, in the souls who are working their way onwards "in the love of light, and in the light of love."

These considerations would have been enough to induce me to begin with the second Cantica, even had not the late Dr. Carlyle's admirable prose translation already been in existence. As it was, it seemed wholly superfluous, for the present at all events, to go over the same ground as he had done. My object being what I have said, when so good an "initiateur" (to use another expression of Sainte-Beuve's) was at hand, whom I could not hope or wish to supersede, it was obviously natural to go on from the point where he had left off. Some such continuation seemed not uncalled for. As far as I know, there exists only one English prose translation besides Dr. Carlyle's. That does indeed profess to render the whole poem, but it does not go beyond profession, for its performance is of poor quality. Verse-translations of course we have, many and good; but no verse-translation can be a wholly satisfactory "crib;" and it is at the production of a "crib," pure and simple, that I have aimed. Even blank verse, in spite of Herr Witte's dictum, does not quite "allow that freedom of movement, without which the thought of the original runs too great a risk of being defaced or displaced through the exigences of form." After all, when our first Latin scholar has not scrupled to put Lucretius into prose, multa cum laude, prose-translations of poetry need no justification. I may perhaps remark here, that where a question has arisen

* I ought to mention that, in reply to an inquiry of mine, Dr. Carlyle very kindly informed me that he had no intention of proceeding any further with his Translation.

* On looking at Mr. Longfellow's translation, I find repeated instances in which my rendering of a whole line or more is identical with his. As I had not read twenty lines of his, or any other, these resemblances are purely fortuitous.
between a literal and an elegant rendering, I have preferred the former; my object being, as I have said, not to attempt an addition to English literature, but to aid beginners in understanding that of Italy. Also, wherever it seemed possible to render an Italian word or idiom by a cognate form in English, I have not scrupled to do so, even at the cost of an occasional archaism.

I have worked chiefly with Bianchi's edition (Le Monnier) of 1863, which seems to me both in text and notes much superior to Fraticelli's. That of Signor Giuliani did not appear in time for me to avail myself of it. The notes of "Philalethes" are invaluable for historical and philosophical information; and his translation appears to me at once easier and more accurate than that of Herr Witte, if a raw recruit may, without presumption, criticise the leader of living Dantophilists. The notes of the last-named are most useful; also his larger edition of the text; though, as he has admittedly employed four MSS. only, his settlement of it can hardly be considered final, nor have I hesitated in occasionally departing from it. I have collated throughout, and given the most noteworthy readings of both the Codex Cassinensis (this from the splendid edition published by the fathers of Monte Cassino, for which I have to thank a friend who trusted me with his copy) and also one of the three MSS. possessed by the University of Cambridge. This last is a handsome book, with illuminated initials to each Cantica, and to Canto xxviii. of the "Purgatory." It appears to have been written by a Tuscan, about the end of the fourteenth century. Its Commentary, which was written towards 1447, is mainly an abridgement from that of Benvenuto da Imola; this, unfortunately, has not yet, as far as I know, been printed in the original Latin, though there is a (not very literal) Italian translation of it.
The large Venice edition of 1576, with Landino's and Vellutello's notes, is very useful; though Vellutello serves for a warning almost as often as for a pattern. The text, which appears to be Vellutello's (and which from his preface he seems to flatter himself is as correct as human power can make it), agrees pretty much with Landino's, and I have therefore referred to it as "Land."¹ John Villani's History is an indispensable companion to Dante, and is the more valuable, because Villani was politically a Guelf, while Dante, though not an absolute partisan of either side, has generally and on the whole justly been reckoned as a Ghibeline, so that by the help of either we can check the estimate of persons and actions expressed by the other. Moreover, Villani's prose has a good deal of the same straightforward directness as Dante's verse. Herr Blanc's Dictionary (of which I have used the Italian translation, Barbèra, 1859), concordance and commentary in one as it is, may be called an "epoch-making" book in the history of the study of Dante. It has probably lightened my work at least one-half. The only misfortune is that it is not a Dictionary of Dante's complete works. His "Erklärungen" are also useful; though here, too, that reliance on erudition to the exclusion of taste, which is a common feature of German criticism, makes itself sometimes apparent. Dr. Scartazzini's enormous compilation contains nearly everything that has been said on every line and word; and therefore necessarily contains much that is of service, but the reader has to make his own selection. The French have done less than the Germans to promote the study of Dante. They have several translations, both in prose and verse, but it looks almost as if Voltaire's contemptible criticism of the "Divine Comedy" had done a mischief to the taste of the nation in regard to it which, in spite of the efforts of such men as Fauriel and Ozanam, is still not wholly effaced. In English we have, as I have said, many translations, mostly in verse; some, notably those of Cary, Carlyle, and Longfellow, possessing useful notes, chiefly explanatory, but nothing like a critical edition. Indeed, Dr. Carlyle says that when he first thought of publishing such an edition with English notes, he was told that he would "make a piebald monstrous book, such as had not been seen in this country." Since that time, however, people's views have changed, and it seems no longer to be thought necessary that the student of a foreign tongue, whether ancient or modern, should be confined to the use of that very tongue of which he is ex hypothesi ignorant, pitched, so to speak, into deep water, in order that he may learn to swim. We no longer teach boys Virgil with the help of Latin notes, why should they not have the benefit of English notes to learn Dante? This principle is recognised in Mr. Cotterill's "Selections from Dante's Inferno," published at the Clarendon Press, with Introductory Chapters and copious notes in English. His sketch of the history of the times and account of Dante's life will be found very useful; the notes, however, show signs of haste, and, especially on points of philology, would be all the better for revision. Still they have a claim on our regard as a protest against the doctrine implied by the Mentors whom Dr. Carlyle quotes.

¹ In two passages, however (ii. 23 and xxviii. 67), where that edition follows Landino's note, the reading given is that of his text (1481).

Lastly, as to the importance of the "Divine Comedy" as a subject of study at all, over and above its purely aesthetic merits. It is not too much to say that there is no one work of human genius which can equal it as an instrument of education, intellectual and moral. As to the former, it is only needful to realise that it is the summary of all the thought and speculation, the record of all the action of the thirteenth century: the age which of all whose memory remains to us produced the greatest number of great men. This was the age of Frederick II., Lewis IX., Simon of Montfort, Thomas Aquinas, Roger Bacon; the age which saw the revival of painting in Cimabue and Giotto, of sculpture in Nicholas; while Amiens and Westminster, the Old Palace of Florence and the Holy Field of Pisa are living evidence of what it could do in the noblest of all the arts. It was to such an age as this that Dante's poem first gave a voice; and he who would appreciate the poem, must first have made himself in some degree familiar with the age.

In estimating the moral value of the "Divine Comedy," I cannot do better (more especially as they seem to corroborate the views of Sainte-Beuve with which I began) than quote the eloquent words of the Dean of St. Paul's, whose admirable essay 1 ought to be in the hands of every reader of Dante. "Those who know it best will best know how hard it is to be the interpreter of such a mind, but they will sympathise with the wish to call attention to it. They know and would wish others to know, not by hearsay, but by experience, the power of that wonderful poem. They know its austere yet subduing beauty; they know what force there is in its free and earnest yet solemn verse, to strengthen, to tranquillise, to console. It is a small thing that it has the secret of Nature and Man; that a few keen words have opened their eyes to new sights in earth and sea and sky; have taught them new mysteries of sound; have made them recognise, in distinct image or thought, fugitive feelings, or their unheeded expression by look or gesture or motion; that it has enriched the public and collective memory of society with new instances, never to be lost, of human feelings and fortune; has charmed ear and mind by the music of its stately march, and the variety and completeness of its plan. But, besides this, they know how often its seriousness has put to shame their trifling, its magnanimity their faint-heartedness, its living energy their indolence, its stern and sad grandeur rebuked low thoughts, its thrilling tenderness overcome sullenness and assuaged distress, its strong faith quelled despair and soothed perplexity, its vast grasp imparted harmony to the view of clashing truths.”

1 Now republished in a separate form by Messrs. Macmillan.

A few words of explanation as to abbreviations, etc., will suffice. The numerals, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 denote respectively the editions of Foligno, Jesi, Mantua, Naples (Francesco del Tuppo) and Naples (1477). The readings of the last are taken from the late Dr. Barlow’s “Seicento Lezioni,” published in 1875. For the Cambridge MS. mentioned above, I have used faute de mieux the letters Gg. by which it is known in the catalogue. Diez’s “Grammar of the Romance Languages” is quoted by volume and page from the French translation of MM. Brachet, Morel-Fatio, and Gaston Paris. (Paris: Franck. 1874–76.) References to Villani are according to the chapters as they are numbered in the edition in two volumes published at Milan, without date, a few years ago, edited by Dr. A. Racheli. Besides these, there are, I believe, no references or abbreviations which will not explain themselves.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS.</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>CANTO I.</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO II.</td>
<td>13</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO III.</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO IV.</td>
<td>37</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO V.</td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO VI.</td>
<td>61</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO VII.</td>
<td>75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO VIII.</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO IX.</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO X.</td>
<td>113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XI.</td>
<td>124</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XII.</td>
<td>136</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XIII.</td>
<td>147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XIV.</td>
<td>160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XV.</td>
<td>174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XVI.</td>
<td>186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XVII.</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XVIII.</td>
<td>212</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XIX.</td>
<td>226</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XX.</td>
<td>238</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CONTENTS</td>
<td>PAGE</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>--------------------------------</td>
<td>------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXI</td>
<td>252</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXII</td>
<td>264</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXIII</td>
<td>277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXIV</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXV</td>
<td>306</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXVI</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXVII</td>
<td>334</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXVIII</td>
<td>346</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXIX</td>
<td>358</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXX</td>
<td>371</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXXI</td>
<td>384</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXXII</td>
<td>397</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>CANTO XXXIII</td>
<td>411</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX A</td>
<td>422</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>APPENDIX B</td>
<td>427</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GLOSSARY</td>
<td>433</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
PRELIMINARY NOTE.

Purgatory is figured as an island-mountain, whose summit just reaches to the first of the celestial spheres, that of the Moon, resembling in this the mountain described by Pliny as existing off the west coast of Africa. From this it is not improbable that the notion which Dante adopted was taken. It is exactly at the antipodes of Jerusalem, and its bulk is precisely equal and opposite to the cavity of Hell. The lower part of the mountain forms a kind of ante-Purgatory, in which souls have to wait until they have atoned for delay in repentance. Purgatory proper consists of seven terraces, connected by steep stairways, and corresponding to the seven deadly sins: Pride, Envy, Anger, Sloth, Avarice, Gluttony, Lust. Chaucer’s “Persons Tale” gives a very good view of the mediæval doctrine on the subject of these sins. It seems to me not impossible that Chaucer, who certainly knew something of Dante (for he quotes him more than once), had the “Purgatory” in his mind when he wrote it. On the summit of the mountain is the Earthly Paradise, formerly the Garden of Eden. The earliest representation of Purgatory as Dante imagined it, with which I am acquainted, is in a picture (1465) by Dom. di Michelino, over the north door of the cathedral of Florence. The action of the Cantica occupies rather more than three days, beginning a little before sunrise on Easter Day, and ending about noon of the following Wednesday.
ERRATA.

P. 4, l. 10—for "fringed" read "adorned."
P. 8, note a—for "Basti" read "Bastiti;" for "5" read "135."
P. 9, l. 9—for "puts . . . grows" read "should put . . . grow."
P. 10, note e—for "124" read "1234."
P. 12, canto i. note to l. 133—add: "The rush thus takes the place of the cord which he had cast away, Inf. xvi. 106 sqq., where see Carlyle's note."
P. 15, note a—should be "che bianche a dis. Gg.; bianche dis. 15; bianco d. s. Cass. 24; biancheggiar 3 Land. (1481)."—note b add "apparver Land. (1481)."
P. 16, note c—for "45" read "5"; for "12" read "1234."
P. 21, canto ii. note to l. 91—the words "sciolta sc. anima" refer to l. 89.
P. 26, l. 3—for "attentions" read "attention."
P. 33, l. 10—after "my" insert "fair."
P. 39, l. 7—for "mounted" read "were mounting."
P. 48, l. 23—for έτέραν . . . έστε" read "έτεραν . . . έστε."
P. 61, l. 3 of Argument—for "Gordello" read "Sordello."
P. 66, canto vi. 61—for "Vennimo" read "Vehinimo."
P. 109, l. 11—for "open the sacred door" read "the door of the sacred gateway."
P. 114, l. 2—dele "of."
P. 118, note e—for "134" read "1234."
P. 175, note to canto xv. 15—for "dicht" read "Licht."
P. 212, canto xvii. l. 7—for "padra" read "padre."
P. 221, canto xviii. l. 94—add to note: "May not the true reading be valca, 'strides?'"
P. 227, l. 7—for "nimble" read "straight"; for "straight" read "upright."
P. 236, note l—add "dentro 14."
P. 247, canto xx. note to ll. 91-93—for "Vellutello" read "Villani."
ERRATA.

P. 254, note to canto xxi. l. 20—for "deguia" read "degni"; and add "The subj. is used because 'che' is equiv. to 'tali che.'"

P. 261, l. 5—for "bondage" read "banishment."

P. 264, note a—for "124" read "1234."

P. 272, note to canto xxii. l. 98, and l. 5 in note—for "Varus" read "Varius."

P. 276, note a—for "aperte" read "aperto."

P. 295, note b—insert "3" after "Cass." and add "il n. c. 124."

P. 296, note b, line 2—dele "W.;."

P. 309, note c—dele "124."

P. 342, note !—for "1" read "2."

P. 356, note to canto xxviii. l. 122—for "vv." read "v."

P. 362, note f—for "14" read "134"; note to xxix. l. 47, for "volto" read "volte."

P. 381, note to canto xxx. l. 124—for "last note" read "note to l. 115."

P. 392, note to canto xxxi. l. 95—transpose "warp" and "woof."

P. 400, note d—for "foglia 124" read "foglie 124."

P. 408, note f—dele "3," and for "14" read "124."

P. 416, note f—after "Bi.;" insert "pietrato 3;" dele "3" before "W.;" and add "cinto 14."

P. 427, l. 3—for "it" read "them."

* * * I feel that some apology is owing for so long a list of oversights, and probably several more which I have failed to discover. My only excuse must be want of experience in correcting somewhat complicated proofs.

A. J. B.
PURGATORY.

CANTO I.

ARGUMENT.

Virgil and Dante come out upon the island from which rises the mountain of Purgatory. It is the dawn of Easter Day. They meet Cato, the guardian of the place, and to him explain their coming. By his direction, Virgil washes Dante's face with dew and girds him with a rush.

To speed over better waters henceforth the bark of my wit hoists her sails, for she is leaving behind her so cruel a sea; and I have to sing of that second realm, where the spirit of man is purified, and becomes worthy to ascend to heaven.

Per correr miglior acqua alza le vele
Omai la navicella del mio ingegno,
Che lascia dietro a sè mar si crudele:
E canterò di quel secondo regno,
Ove l' umano spirito si purga,
E di salire al Ciel diventa degno.

1 Correr acqua. So Virgil "Currere aequora." Cf. Par. ii. 7.
2 Omai contracted from ora mai = now and henceforth. Boccaccio however uses it (Day v. Nov. 2) as = by this time. The converse change is illustrated by the late Greek use of πώπορε with future, e.g. St. John vi. 35.
3 Che is used much as in Inf. i. 3. See Diez Gram. Rom. iii. 311. (But it is even more like the vulgar English use of "which." Cf. l. 120.)
But here let the dead strain arise again, O holy Muses, since I am yours; and here let Calliopea somewhat exalt herself, accompanying my chant with that sound, the stroke whereof the wretched Picae felt so great that they lost hope of pardon.

A sweet hue of oriental sapphire which was gathering in the serene aspect of the pure ether up to the prime

Ma qui la morta poesia risurgia,
O sante Muse, poi che vostro sono,
E qui Calliopea alquanto surga,
Segue la mia canzone, quel suono
Di cui le Piche misere sentiro
Lo colpo tal, che disperar perdono.
Dolce color d' oriental zaffiro,
Che s' accoglieva nel sereno aspetto
Dell' aer puro infino al primo giro,

8 Cf. Inf. ii. 7.
11 The story of the Picae is told in Ov. Met. v. 300 sqq., 663 sqq.
15 Aer puro, contrasted with aura morta. Elsewhere, however, Dante makes little difference in his use of the two words; only he seems rather to prefer aura for the stagnant air of Hell. But see Glossary. It must be said that all the first five editions, with a good many MSS., read dal mezzo (some having also scuro, which looks like the alteration of someone who did not understand it). Post. Cass. takes mezzo to mean the middle of the sky, and primo giro the horizon; the annotator of Gg. (in which mezzo has been substituted in the original hand, for another word, says "i.e. ab illo hemispherio inferiore, dicitur enim hemispherium quasi dimidia spera"); which seems to point to a reading dal mezzo spero infimo (following the gender of "hemispherium"). Primo giro he explains, "usque ad circulum lunae, vel melius usque ad circulum ignis." On the whole, though I have followed the moderns in reading aer, I do not see why it should in the first instance have been changed to mezzo, while the contrary is likely enough to have happened. If we read aer, we must I think understand primo giro as = primo mobile, the highest sphere, as would appear from Par. xxiii. 112 sqq., to which the eye can reach.
circle, renewed delight to my eyes, soon as I issued forth from the dead air, which had saddened me both eyes and heart. The fair planet which encourages to love was making all the east to smile, veiling the Fishes that were in her escort. I turned me toward the right hand, and gave heed to the other pole, and beheld four stars, never yet seen, save by the folk of old time. The heaven

Agli occhi miei ricominciò diletto,
Tosto ch'io usci' fuor dell' aura morta,
Che m' avea contrastato gli occhi e'l petto.
Lo bel pianeta ch' ad amar conforta,
Faceva tutto rider l'oriente,
Velando i Pesci ch' erano in sua scorta.
Io mi volsi a man destra, e posi mente
All' altro polo, e vidi quattro stelle
Non viste mai fuor ch' alla prima gente.

20

29 Cf. xxvii. 95.

21 When Venus is a morning star at this time of year, she is in or near Pisces, the Sun being in Aries. As a matter of fact, at Easter 1300 she was rising some forty minutes after the Sun. Probably Dante took the phenomena as they were when he was writing.

22 Observe that in order to see these four stars, which denote the active or cardinal virtues, he turns to the right hand; in xxxii. 8 he turns to the left to look at the nymphs who represent the theological or contemplative virtues.

24 Altro polo, the south pole. (That of line 29 is of course the north.) There is much discussion in regard to these stars, which are almost certainly intended for the Southern Cross. (See Humboldt, "Cosmos," Sabine's Transl. vol. ii. p. 291 and note 449; vol. iii. note 401.) Not only may Dante have heard of it from travellers, but his own astronomical knowledge was probably sufficient to tell him that the "Setentrional sin" had once enjoyed the sight of the four stars, which have been visible as far north as the shores of the Baltic. There is, of course, also an allusion in lines 26 and 27 to the commonplace of poets, that men have declined in the practice of virtue. It should be appeared to rejoice in their flames. O widowed region of the Northern Star, since thou hast been bereaved of gazing upon those! When I had withdrawn from regarding them, turning myself a little towards the other pole, to that quarter where the Wain had by this time disappeared, I saw hard by me a solitary old man, in aspect worthy of so much reverence that no son owes more to father. He wore his beard long and mingled with white hair, like to his locks, of which a twofold list fell to his breast. The rays of the four holy lights so fringed his face with lustre, Goder pareva il Ciel di lor fiammelle.

O settentrional vedovo sito,
Poi che privato se’ di mirar quelle!\(^a\)
Com’ io dal loro sguardo fui partito,
Un poco me volgendo all’ altro polo,
 Là onde il Carro già era sparito,\(^b\) 30
Vidi presso di me un veglio solo,
Degno di tanta reverenza in vista,
Che più non dee a padre alcun figliuolo.
Lunga la barba e di pel bianco mista
Portava, a’ suoi capegli simigliante,
De’ quai cadeva al petto doppia lista.
Li raggi delle quattro luci sante
Fregiavan si la sua faccia di lume,

\(^a\) di veder q. Gg. Cass.
\(^b\) * Là ove . . . spartito Gg.*

observed that while in the morning, the time for action, the four stars are conspicuous, the evening is adorned by the three which denote the theological virtues (viii. 89).

\(^30\) Or “where the Wain was no longer to be seen.”

\(^31\) This is the younger Cato. Virgil’s line “Secretosque pios, his dantem jura Catone.” Æneid viii. 670, probably suggested his employment as warden of Purgatory.
that I saw it as the sun were before me. "Who are ye that against the blind stream have fled the eternal prison?" said he, moving those honourable plumes. "Who has guided you? or who was your lantern, as you issued forth from the profound night which ever makes black the infernal valley? Are the laws of the pit thus broken, or has a new counsel come about in Heaven, that being damned, ye come to my rocks?" My leader then took hold of me, and with words and with hands and with signs

Ch' io 'l vedea come il Sol fosse davante,
Chi siete voi, che contro 'l cieco fiume                  40
Fuggito avete la prigione eterna?
Diss' ei, movendo quell' oneste piume.
Chi v' ha guidati? o chi vi fu lucerna,
Uscendo fuor della profonda notte,
Che sempre nera fa la valle inferna?
Son le leggi d' abisso così rotte?
O è mutato in Ciel nuovo consiglio, c
Che dannati venite alle mie grotte?
Lo Duca mio allor mi diè di piglio,
E con parole e con mani e con cenni

50

ha mut. il Ciel Gg.

---

39 Come for come se; see Diez iii. 337.
40 Il cieco fiume, see Inf. xxxiv. 130.
43 Psalm cxix. 105.
44 Notice the omission of the article before abisso, the word being used here in a special signification. So Petr. Son. cxiii. "Ponmi in Cielo, od in terra, od in abisso." Cf. meridian, iv. 138.
46 Die di piglio. Cf. dar di morso, xviii. 132, di becco, xxiii. 30. This use, which appears to be a form of the "partitive genitive," seems to have escaped the notice of Diez.
made me reverent, both in knees and brow. Then he answered him: "I came not of myself; a lady descended from Heaven, through whose prayers I helped this man with my company. But since it is thy will that more be unfolded as to our condition, how in truth it is, it cannot be mine that it be denied thee. This man has not yet seen the last evening [of life], but by his folly he was so near to it, that very little time was yet to pass. In such wise as I have said, was I sent to him for his salvation, and there was no other road than this

Reverenti mi fe' le gambe e il ciglio:
Poscia rispose lui: Da me non venni:
Donna scese dal Ciel, per li cui preghi
Della mia compagnia costui sovvenni.
Ma da ch' è tuo voler, che più si spieghi
Di nostra condizion, com' ella è vera,
Esser non puote il mio ch' a te si nieghi.
Questi non vide mai l' ultima sera,
Ma per la sua follia le fu si presso,
Che molto poco tempo a volger era.
Si come io dissi, fui mandato ad esso
Per lui campare, e non v' era altra via Che questa per la quale io mi son messo.

53 See Inf. ii. 52 sqq.
54 Come ella e vera. I have followed Bianchi; but the words may also mean, "how true it is," i.e. "how we are not deceiving you about it."
55 Il mio sc. voler.
56 Would it not be better to read adesso, "I was sent straightway?"
Cf. xxiv. 113.
57 Per lui campare. Lo would have been more usual; but lui is not uncommon in Dante in this position. See Diez iii. 48. Perhaps the preceding per has caused its use here, by a kind of attraction.
CANTO I.

by which I have been sent. I have shown him all the guilty race, and now I purpose to show him those spirits who are being cleansed under thy stewardship. How I have brought him it were long to tell thee: from on high virtue descends, which is aiding me to lead him to see thee and to hear thee. Now may it please thee to accept his coming graciously; he goes seeking freedom, which is so dear, as he knows who for it refuses life. Thou knowest it, seeing that for its sake death was not bitter to thee in Utica, where thou didst leave the garment that at the great day shall be so bright. The eternal edicts are not broken for us, for this man lives, and Minos binds me not; but I

Mostrata ho lui tutta la gente ria,
Ed ora intendo mostrar quegli spirti,
Che purgan sè sotto la tua balia.
Com’ io l’ ho tratto, saria lungo a dirti.
Dell’ alto scende virtù che m’ aiuta
Conducerlo a vederti ed ad udirti.
Or ti piaccia gradir la sua venuta :
Libertà va cercando, ch’è si cara,
Come sa chi per lei vita rifula.
Tu il sai : che non ti fu per lei amara
In Utica la morte, ove lasciasti
La veste, ch’ al gran dì sarà sì chiara.
Non son gli editti eterni per noi guasti :
Chè questi vive, e Minos me non lega :

73 Cf. De Mon. ii. 5. “Ut mundo libertatis amorem accenderet quanti libertas esset ostendit, dum e vita liber decedere maluit, quam sine libertate remanere in illa.”

75 If anyone wishes to know how Cato, an unbaptised heathen, and moreover a suicide, can expect a destiny so different from that of all other heathens and suicides, he will find the wisdom of the old commentators reduced within moderate compass in Bianchi’s note.
am of the circle where are the chaste eyes of thy Marcia, who in her visage [seems] still to pray thee, O holy breast, to hold her for thine. For her love's sake, then, bend thyself to us. Let us go through thy seven realms; thanks will I bear back to her on thy behalf, if thou deignest to be mentioned there below." "Marcia pleased my eyes so much while I was yonder," said he then, "that all the favours she would of me I did. Now that she dwells beyond the evil stream, she can move me no more, by that law which was made when I issued forth from thence. But if a dame of heaven moves and guides thee, as thou sayest, there is

Ma son del cerchio, ove son gli occhi casti
Di Marzia tua, che in vista ancor ti prega,
O santo petto, che per tua la tegni:
Per lo suo amore adunque a noi ti piega.
Lasciane andar per li tuoi sette regni:
Grazie riporterò di te a lei,
Se d' esser mentovato laggù degni.
Marzia piacque tanto agli occhi miei,
Mentre ch' io fui di là, diss' egli allora,
Che quante grazie volle da me fei.
Or, che di là dal mal fume dimora,
Più muover non mi pud per quella legge,
Che fatta fu quand' io me n' usci' fuora.
Ma se Donna del Ciel ti muove e regge,
Come tu dì', non c' è mestier lusinga:
Bastiti ben che per lei mi richegge.d

d Basti sol 4; Bastisi ben 5.

79 For an explanation of the symbolism of Cato and Marcia, see Conv. iv. 28.
80 Santo petto. Cf. sacratissimo petto. Conv. iv. 5.
86 Di là = "in the world of living men," as always in the Purgatory.
no need of fair words. Suffice it thee fully that thou askest me in her name. Go then, and see that thou gird this man with a smooth rush, and that thou wash his face, so that thence thou mayest put away all grime; for it would not be meet to go with eyes possessed by any cloud before the first minister who is of them of Paradise. This little isle around its lowest base, yonder where the water beats on it, bears rushes above the soft mud. No plant of other kind, such as puts forth leaves or grows hard, can there have life; seeing that it yields not to blows. Afterwards let not your returning be hitherward. The Sun, which is

Va dunque, e fa che tu costui ricenga
   D' un giunco schietto, e che gli lavi 'l viso,
Si ch' ogni sucidume quindi stinga:
Chè non si convertì l' occhio sorriso
   D' alcuna nebbia andar davanti al primo
Ministro, ch' è di quei di Paradiso.

Questa isoletta intorno ad imo ad imo*
   Laggiù colà dove la batte l' onda,
Porta de' giunchi sovrà 'l molle limo.

Null' altra pianta che facesse fronda,
   O che indurasse, vi puote aver vita;
Però ch' alle percosse non seconda.
Poscia non sia di quà vostra reddita:
   Lo Sol vi mostrerà, che surge omai;

* Quest' isola dint. Gg.

96 Stinga, literally, “extinguish;” in which sense spegnere taken its place.
102 The rush typifies the “broken and contrite heart.”
104 Altra is in fact pleonastic. Cf. Gr. ἄλλος, and see Diez iii.
even now rising, will show you where to take the mountain at an easier ascent.”

Therewith he disappeared; and I raised myself up without speaking, and drew myself wholly back to my leader, and on him bent my eyes. He began: “Son, follow my steps; let us turn back, for on this side this plain slopes to its low-lying bounds.” The dawn was conquering the shade of early morn, which fled before, so that I discerned afar the glimmer of the sea. We began going through the lonely plain like a man who is returning to the

Prender il monte a più lieve salita.\(^f\)
Così sparì: ed io su mi levai,
Senza parlare, e tutto mi ritrassi
Al Duca mio, e gli occhi a lui drizzai.
Ei cominciò: Figliuol, seguì i miei passì :\(^g\)
Volgianci indietro, che di qua dichina
Questa pianura a’ suoi termini bassi.
L’ alba vinceva l’ora mattutina,
Che fuggia innanzi, sì che di lontano
Conobbi il tremolar della marina.
Noi andavam per lo solingo piano,

\(^f\) Prendete Cass. Gg.; pigliate Ald.
\(^g\) Ei com. seguisci li m.p. Gg. Cass. 124 W.

\(^{107, 108}\) I.e. the easiest ascent is on the east side.

\(^{115}\) Lombardi takes ora mattutina — the hour of matins, which seems frigid. Another explanation is ora = aura, “the breeze of morning”; but this can hardly be said to fly before the dawn, nor would its departure enable Dante to see the sea any better. On the other hand, ora = ombra, seems doubtful; but cf. adreessa in line 123. Vid. sub ora.

\(^{117}\) Bianchi compares Virgil’s “Splendet tremulo sub lumine pontus.” Aeneid vii. 9.
road which he has lost, in that until he reaches it he seems to himself to be going in vain. When we were where the dew strives with the Sun, and from being in a part where it is shady, diminishes little, my master sweetly placed both hands spread abroad on the short grass; wherefore I, who was ware of his purpose, reached towards him my tearful cheeks; then made he in me all discovered that hue which Hell had concealed.

We came next upon the desert shore, which never yet saw man sail upon its waters, that should thereafter

Com' uom che torna alla smarrita strada,
Che infino ad essa li par ire invano,
Quando noi fummo dove la rugiada
Pugna col Sole, e per essere in parte
Ove adoranza, poco si dirada:
Ambo le mani in su l'eretta parte
Soavemente il mio Maestro pose:
Ond' io che fui accorto di su' arte,
Porsi ver lui le guance lagrimose:
Quivi mi fece tutto discoperto
Quel color che l' Inferno mi nascose.
Venimmo poi in sul lito diserto,
Che mai non vide navicar sue acque
Uomo, che di tornar sia poscia esperto.

These lines are rather obscure. The comparison seems to be between their position in the trackless and guideless plain and that of a man who is trying to hit off a lost path, and has no means of knowing that he is going right till he strikes it.

Adoranza. They are still on the south, therefore the shady side of the mountain, where the Sun has least power and the dew can resist its influence. It is clear that pugna does not refer to the state of things at the moment, because the Sun is not yet up.
know aught of return. There he so girt me as Another willed. O marvel! that such as was the lowly plant he culled, just such an one there straightway grew again in that place whence he plucked it.

Quivi mi cinse, si come altrui piacque:
O maraviglia! che qual egli scelse
L’ umile pianta, cotal si rinacque
Subitamente là onde la svelle.

133 Altrui, not, I think, as most commentators hold, Cato, but God. Cf. Inf. xxvi. 141.
135 Cf. Æneid vi. 143. Symbolically, God’s grace diminishes not by being given.
CANTO II.

ARGUMENT.

First sunrise. As the poets are standing on the shore, a boat arrives, steered by an Angel, bearing souls to Purgatory. Dante recognises Casella, who begins to sing to them, but Cato hurries them on to the mountain.

ALREADY was the Sun come to that horizon whose meridian circle covers Jerusalem with its highest point; and the night which circles opposite to him was issuing forth from the Ganges with the Balances which fall from her hand when

Già era il Sole all’ orizzonte giunto,
Lo cui meridian cerchio coverchia
Gerusalem col suo più alto punto:
E la Notte, che opposita a lui cerchia,
Uscia di Gange fuor colle bilance,
Che le caggion di man quando soverchia;

1 sqq. Jerusalem and Purgatory are antipodes; therefore they have a common horizon (iv. 70), on which in one direction is India. The "night" means here, as elsewhere in Dante, the point of the heavens opposite to the Sun. Cf. Inf. xxiv. 3. At this time the Sun was in Aries, and therefore the "night" in Libra. When the "night" is getting the mastery, i.e. at the autumnal equinox, the Sun is entering Libra, which thus may be said to fall from the hands of the night.
she gets the mastery: so that the white and ruddy cheeks of fair Aurora, there where I was, through too much age were becoming orange.

We still were alongside the sea, like folk who ponder on their road, who go in heart, but in body loiter; and lo! as on the point of morn Mars glows ruddy through the thick vapours low in the west above the ocean-floor, just such a light (so may I again behold it!) appeared to me

Si che le bianche e le vermiglie guance,
 Là dove io era, della bella Aurora
 Per troppa etate divenian rance.
Noi eravam lunghesso il mare ancora,
 Come gente che pensa suo cammino,
 Che va col core, e col corpo dimora:
 Ed ecco qual, sul presso del mattino,
 Per li grossi vapor Marte rosseggia
 Giù nel ponente sovra il suol marino;
 Cotal m' apparve, s' io ancor lo veggia,
 Un lume per lo mar venir sì ratto,

9 Imitated by Boccaccio at the beginning of Day iii.
Witte reads sorpresso dal, to which it is reasonably objected that to speak of a setting planet as surprised by the rising Sun, is not a very good image. Scartazzini prefers suol presso del, which will not construe, for his theory that rosseggia is the infinitive is untenable. Dante did not write in Piedmontese. Sul presso del is the only reading which gives a good sense; and to Fanfani's objection that this substantival use of presso is not old, it may be replied that Bembo and Landino presumably knew their own language. Bianchi compares such phrases as all' incirca, nel mentre. For the phenomenon, cf. Ar. Met. i. 5, ἀνωρθόντα τὰ ἀστρα καὶ δύόμενα . . . διὰ καπνοῦ φοινικὰ φαίνεται.
16 Cf. Lat. "Sic te diva regat;" so v. 85, xxvi. 61. See Diez iii. 328, 329. It is pretty clear that sí (sic) must have got confused with si (si), and thus have passed into se.
to come over the sea so swift that no flight might match its motion. From the which when I had a short while withdrawn my eye to make inquiry of my leader, I saw it again grown greater and more shining. Then on each side straightway appeared to me a something white, and below it by small degrees came forth another. My Master as yet spake no word until the first white objects appeared as wings; then when he well recognised the helmsman, he cried: "See, see that thou bend thy knees; behold the Angel of God; fold thy hands; henceforth thou wilt see

Che il muover suo nessun volar pareggià;
Dal qual com'io un poco ebbi ritratto
L' occhio per dimandar lo Duca mio,
Rividil più lucente e maggior fatto.
Poi d' ogni parte adesso m' apparìo
Un non sapea che bianco, ed al di sotto\footnote{a che bianche a dis. Gg.; bianche d.s. 15; bianco 24 Land.; biancheggiar 3; bianco d.s. Cass.}
A poco a poco un altro a lui n' uscìo.
Lo mio Maestro ancor non fece moto,
Mentre che i primi bianchi apparsì ali:\footnote{b che p.b.; apparsì ali Gg.; apparsì lali 12345; che i.p.b. apperser Ald. Land.; apparsi Cass.}
Allor che ben conobbe il galeotto,
Gridd: Fa', fa', che le ginochìa calì:
Ecco l' Angel di Dio: piega le mani:

\footnote{23 Bianchi reads \textit{un non sapea che bianco}, e \textit{di}, which leaves the line a syllable short; a difficulty which Witte avoids by reading \textit{sapeva}, and Scart. \textit{sapea}. The former has no authority, the latter no precedent. \textit{Non sapea che} = Lat. "nescio quid." See Diez iii. 50.}
\footnote{25 \textit{Aperser}, the old reading, is clearly wrong; for it makes nonsense of \textit{i primi}; \textit{apparsìer} is the reading of the codex of Filippo Villani; also of Benvenuto.}
thus-fashioned officers. See how he disdains human implements, so that he seeks not oars, nor other sail than his own wings between so distant shores. See how he has them pointed towards the heaven, drawing the air with his eternal feathers, that are not mewed like mortal hair.”
Then as more and more towards us came the bird of God, more bright he appeared, by reason whereof the eye endured him not near, but I lowered it, and he came his Omai vedrai di sì fatti ufficiali.

Vedi che sdegna gli argomenti umani ;
Sì che remo non vuol, nè altro velo
Che l’ ali sue tra liti sì lontani.
Vedi come l’ ha dritte verso il cielo,
Trattando l’ aere con l’ eterne penne ;
Che non si mutan come mortale pelo.
Poi come più e più verso noi venne
L’ uccel divino, più chiaro appariva :
Perchè l’ occhio da presso nol sostenne,

30 Di, partitive, as in French. Diez iii. 149.
31 Argumentum in Low Lat. has the meaning of “stratagem” and “instrument,” especially of torture. Hence it may have been transferred to other instruments. Or it may be that an instrument is the proof of the action performed by it. Littré quotes Rom. de la R.
line 6994, “Qui sont piliers et argumens à soutenir nature humaine,” of the bodily organs. In Decam. viii. 6, prendre argom. = to take measures.
32 Velo = vela, for the sake of rhyme ; though, possibly, at this time the distinction, a purely arbitrary one, did not exist.
33 Trattando is generally taken as = agitando; but it may here have its primary idea of drawing the air, as a swimmer does the water.
The readings lato and lali, though not uncommon, are clearly wrong.
34 Pelo, for “feathers;” just as piume, i. 42, for “hair.”
way to the shore, with a little boat, swift and so light that the water sucked not aught of it in. On the poop stood the heavenly helmsman, such that he appeared blessed by a sure title; and more than a hundred spirits sat within it. In exitu Israel de Egypto, were they all singing in one voice, with so much of that psalm as is after written. Then made he them the sign of holy Cross; whereat they

Ma chinai ’l giuso : e quei sen venne a riva
Con un vasello snelletto e leggiero,
Tanto che l’ acqua nulla ne inghiottiva.
Da poppa stava il celestial nocchiero,
Tal che parea beato per iscritto ;
E più di cento spirti entro sediero :
In exitu Israel de Egitto
Cantavan tutti insieme ad una voce,
Con quanto di quel salmo è poscia scritto.
Poi fece il segno lor di santa Croce ;

d chinai viso Gg.
faria . . . per iscr. Gg.; faria . . . pur 2 W.

44 Witte prefers faria beato pur descritto, which, as being more easily intelligible, is less probably, according to a well-known rule of criticism, the true reading. The usual interpretation of parea beato per iscritto is that taken by Lombardi, Bianchi, Blanc, Philalethes, “as though it were written on him.” But Landino says: “cioe, confirmato beato;” and Ducange says inscriptum = instrumentum donationis. So Bocc. Dec. viii. 10, of a merchant putting goods in a “bonded warehouse”—“dando per iscritto la mercatantia.”

45 Sediero, formed directly from sederunt.

46 Cf. Conv. iii. 1, and the letter to Can Grande, § 7. It may be noted that this Psalm has always been held appropriate to Easter.

C
threw themselves all upon the beach, and he went his way swift as he had come.

The crowd which remained there seemed strange to the place, gazing around, like one who is essaying new things. On all sides the Sun was darting the day, who had with his gentle shafts chased Capricorn from the midst of heaven; when the new folk raised their faces toward us,

Ond' ei si gittar tutti in su la piaggia,

Ed ei sen gi, come venne, veloce.

La turbà che rimase il, selvaggia

Parea del loco, rimirando intorno;

Come colui che nuove cose assaggia.

Da tutte parti saettava il giorno

Lo Sol, ch' avea con le saette conte

Di mezzo il ciel cacciato il Capricorno:

Quando la nuova gente alzò la fronte

55 Conte—Land. says : "vere e certe;" Vell., "manifesti e noti;" Bianchi explains, "chiare, o forse pratiche, esperte nel cogliere il segno;" Blanc, "luminosi;" Philal., "leuchtend;" Witte, "licht." The word is the Italian form of "cognitus," which, according to a glossary of the 12th century, quoted by Diez, seems to have been used as equivalent to "benignus," "humanus." May it not have been used in some early translation of Homer to represent ἀγαθός, the regular epithet of Apollo's arrows? No complete translation is known to have existed at this time, and Dante himself says, Conv. i. 7, that "Omero non si mutò di greco in latino." But he quotes Homer, as in V.N. § 2, and in De Mon., and, as he knew less Greek than Shakespeare, this can only be from a Latin version. Moreover Burckhardt, "History of the Renaissance," chap. iii., mentions the existence of a fragment of a translation earlier than that made by Boccaccio and Leontius Pilatus; so that the theory which I have ventured to adopt at least involves no anachronism.

57 When Aries, in which the Sun is at this time, is on the horizon, Capricorn is on the meridian. The meaning, therefore, is that the Sun was half a sign, or 15 degrees high.
saying to us: "If you know, show us the way to go toward the mount." And Virgil answered: "You think perhaps that we are experienced of this place; but we are strangers, as ye are. We came erewhile, a little before you, by another way that was so rough and hard that climbing henceforth will seem sport to us." The spirits, who had observed in me by my breathing that I was still alive, marvelling, grew pale with wonder; and as to a messenger who bears olive the folk draw to hear news, and none shows himself shy of trampling, so on my aspect fixed themselves

Ve' noi, dicendo a noi; Se voi sapete, Mostratene la via di gire al monte,
E Virgilio rispose: Voi credete
Forse che siamo sperti d'esto loco:
Ma noi sem peregrin, come voi siete:
Dianzi venimmo, innanzi a voi un poco,
Per altra via che fu si aspra e forte,
Che lo salire omai ne parrà gioco.
L'anime che si fur di me accorte
Per lo spirar, ch'io era ancora vivo,
Maravigliando diventarò smorte:
E come a messaggier, che porta olivo,
Tragge la gente per udir novelle,
E di calcar nessun si mostra schivo:
Così al viso mio s'affissar quelle

1 per saper Gg.

Aspra e forte, cf. Inf. i. 5.
Smorte, cf. the Shakespearian "all amort." The spirits of course resemble their living selves in complexion as in feature.
Readers of "Romola" will remember an illustration, bk. iii. ch. 2.
all those fortunate souls, as though forgetful of going to make themselves fair. I saw one of them draw forward to embrace me with so great affection that it moved me to do the like. O shadows, unreal, save in the appearance! Thrice behind him I clasped my hands, and as often I returned with them to my own breast. Of wonder, I suppose, I took the hue; because the shade smiled, and drew back, and I following it pressed further. Gently he bade me pause; then I knew who he was, and prayed that to speak with me he would stay a little. He answered me: "As I loved thee in the

Anime fortunate tutte quante,
Quasi obbliando d' ire a farsi belle.
Io vidi una di loro trarsi avante
Per abbracciarci con si grande affetto,
Che mosse me a far il simigliante.
O ombre vane, fuor che nell' aspetto!
Tre volte dietro a lei le mani avvinsi,
E tante mi tornai con esse al petto.
Di maraviglia, credo, mi dipinsi:
Perchè l' ombra sorrisse e si ritrasse,
Ed io, seguendo lei, oltre mi pinsi.
Soavemente disse ch' io posasse:
Allor conobbi chi era, e pregai*
Che per parlarmi un poco s' arrestasse.
Risposemi: Così com' io t' amai

* Conobbi allora Ald.; allor W. [which leaves the line at least a syllable short]; ? all. con. c. era ed il pr.

75 "Forgetting that they had to go on to the Mountain of Purification."
mortal body so love I thee being a spirit unbound; therefore I stay; but wherefore goest thou?" "My Casella, that I may return a second time to that place where I am, I make this journey," said I; "but from thee how has so much time been taken?" And he to me: "No outrage has been done me, if he who takes up both when and whom he pleases has many times denied me that passage; for of a just will is his will framed. Nevertheless for three months past he has taken whoso would enter, with all peace. Wherefore I, who had now turned towards the sea, where Tiber's water

Nel mortal corpo, così t'amo sciolta:
Però m’arresto: ma tu perché vai?
Casella mio, per tornare altra volta
 Là dove io son, fo io questo viaggio:
Diss’io, ma a te com’è tanta ora tolta?⁴
Ed egli a me: Nessun m’è fatto oltraggio,
Se quei, che leva e quando e cui gli piace,
Più volte m’ha negato esto passaggio;
Chè di giusto voler lo suo si face.
Veramente da tre mesi egli ha tolto,
Chi ha voluto entrar con tutta pace.
Ond’io che era ora alla marina volto,
Dove l’acqua di Tevere s’insala,

⁴ Ma a te com’era tanta terra tolta Gg. Ald. 12345; Ma a te com’è diss’io t. o. t. Land.

⁵ Cf. xxx. 136 sqq. Sciolta sc. anima, 91.
⁶ "How is it that you have been kept waiting so long before coming here?"
⁷ I.e. the angel who bears the souls.
⁸ Since the beginning of the jubilee, i.e. since Christmas 1299.
enters the salt, was in his goodness gathered in by him. To that mouth has he now his wing directed, since always there is assembled whatsoever falls not towards Acheron.” And I: “If a new law takes not away from thee memory or use in the amorous chant which was wont to quiet all my wishes, let it please thee therewith to comfort somewhat my soul, which coming here with its body is so wearied.” Love, which discourses in my mind to me, then began he so sweetly, that the sweetness yet sounds within me. My Master, and I, and that folk who were with him appeared Benignamente fui da lui ricolto.

A quelle foce ha egli or dritta l' ala :
Perocchè sempre quivi si raccoglie,
Qual verso d' Acheronte non si cala.
Ed io: Se nuova legge non ti toglie
Memoria o uso all' amoroso canto,
Che mi solea quetar tutte mie voglie,
Di cò ti piaccia consolare alquanto
L' anima mia, che con la sua persona,
Venendo qui, è affannata tanto.

Amor che nella mente mi ragiona,
Cominciò egli allor sì dolcemente,
Che la dolcezza ancor dentro mi suona.
Lo mio Maestro, ed io, e quella gente,
Ch' eran con lui, parevan si contenti,

---

112 The first line of the Canzone of Conv. iii.
113 Cf. Milton, Sonnet xiii. A ballad set to music by Casella is said to be still extant in the Vatican Library.
114 Dentro mi; so innanzi mi, iv. 136. See Diez iii. 288. He regards it as an instance of the adverb being used as a preposition; but is not mi a dative here?
so content, as though naught else touched the minds of any. We were all fixed and intent on his notes; and lo! the honourable ancient, crying: "What is this, lazy spirits? What negligence, what halt is this? Haste to the mount to strip you of the slough, which allows not God to be manifest to you."

As when, plucking wheat or tare, the pigeons assembled at their feeding, quiet, without showing their accustomed pride, if anything appears whereof they have fear, suddenly let their food stay, because they are assailed by a greater

Com' a nessun toccasse altro la mente.
Noi eravam tutti fissi ed attenti¹
Alle sue note: ed ecco il veglio onesto,
Gridando, Che è ciò, spirito lenti?
Qual negligenza, quale stare è questo?
Correte al monte a spogliarvi lo scoglio,
Ch' esser non lascia a voi Dio manifesto.
Come quando, cogliendo biada o loglio,⁵
Gli colombi adunati alla pastura,
Queti senza mostrar l' usato orgoglio,
Se cosa appare, ond' elli abbian paura,
Subitamente lasciano star l' esca,

¹ Noi andavam W. ⁵ E come raccogl. Gg.

122 Scoglio for scoglia, as velo for vela in l. 32. Crusc. recognises this form, but does not quote this passage. In Vanzon's Dict. is quoted "Lo serpe getta ogni anno lo scoglio vecchio."
128, 30, 32 I do not feel sure that we have got the correct reading of these lines. Many MSS. and edd. have, s'arresta or s'arresca (the two are much alike in MSS.). Fresca, in the sense of "newly come," is not very common, and one is tempted to suggest prestà, but there is no authority for it; and the difficulty remains of the rhyme to esca.
care, so saw I this fresh-come troop leave the song, and flee toward the hillside, as one who goes, nor knows where he is coming forth. Nor less swift was our own departure.

Perchè assaliti son da maggior cura:
Così vid’ io quella masnada fresca
Lasciar lo canto, e gire inver la costa,¹
Com’ uom che va, nè sa dove riesca;²
Nè la nostra partita fu men tosta.

¹ e fuggir ver Bi.
² s’arresta Gg. Land. Ald.; saresca Cass.; sarruesca 145; siresca 23.
CANTO III.

ARGUMENT.

Dante perceives that he casts a shadow, Virgil none. Virgil explains the reason, and so they reach the foot of the mountain. A troop of souls overtake them, who show them the right point to begin the ascent. Manfred talks with Dante, who learns that these are the souls of men who had died excommunicate, but had repented before death.

ALBEIT their sudden flight had scattered those over the plain, turned towards the mountain, whither reason goads us, I drew close to the faithful escort; and how should I have sped without him? Who would have drawn me up over the mountain? He seemed to me for his own self remorseful. O conscience, dignified and pure, how bitter a sting is a small fault to thee!

AVVEGNACHE la subitana fuga
    Dispergesse color per la campagna,
    Rivolti al monte ove ragion ne fruga:
Io mi ristrinsi alla fida compagna :
    E come sare' io senza lui 'corso ?
    Chi m' avria tratto su per la montagna?
Ei mi parea da sè stesso rimorso :
    O dignitosa coscienza e netta,
    Come t' è picciol fallo amaro morso !

3 Ove ragion ne fruga. Bianchi compares xxi. 64.
When his feet had left the haste which undoes the seemliness in every action, my mind, which before was restrained, rewidened its attentions as though eager, and I set my face toward the steep, which from the water rises loftiest towards the heaven. The Sun, which behind was blazing ruddy, was broken before me, according to the figure which the check to his rays received in me. I turned me round with fear of being abandoned, when I saw only in front of myself the earth darkened; and my comfort, turning wholly towards me, began to say: "Why art thou still distrustful?

Quando li piedi suoi lasciar la fretta,
Che l' onestade ad ogni atto dismaga,
La mente mia, che prima era ristretta,
Lo intento rallargò, sì come vaga;
E diedi il viso mio incontro al poggio,
Che inverso il ciel più alto si dislaga.
Lo Sol, che dietro fiammeggiava roggio,
Rotto m' era dinanzi, alla figura
Ch' aveva in me de' suoi raggi l'appoggio.
Io mi volsi dallato con paura
D' esser abbandonato, quand' io vidi
Solo dinanzi a me la terra oscura:
E il mio conforto: Perchè pur diffidi,
A dir mi comincìo tutto rivolto;

\[\text{Vaga.} \quad "\text{Desiderosa di conoscere quei nuovi oggetti."—Lomb.}\]
\[\text{Lamb. and Lomb. read "dianzi alla figura;" which also gives a good sense. Che would of course be rendered "for;" and Lo Sol would be the subject of aveva.}\]
\[\text{The force of pur is a little doubtful. Lomb., whom Bianchi follows, says it = ancora with reference to l. 4. It seems better to join it with diffidi than with perché, and to understand it as meaning rather "constantly" than "again."}\]
Believest thou not that I am with thee, and that I guide thee? It is already evening there, where is buried the body within which I cast a shadow. Naples has it, and from Brundusium it was taken. Now if before me nothing lies in shade, marvel thou no more than at the heavens, wherein the one impedes not the other's rays. To suffer torments both of heat and cold that Power ordains like bodies, which will not that the manner of its working be revealed to us. Mad is he who hopes that our reason can travel over the boundless way, which one Substance in three Persons holds. Remain content, race of mankind, at the Non credi tu me teco, e ch'io ti guidi?

Vespro è già colà, dov'è sepolto
Lo corpo, dentro al quale io facea ombra:
Napoli l'ha, e da Brandizio è tolto:
Ora, se innanzi a me nulla s'adombra,
Non ti maravigliar più che de' cieli,
Che l'uno all'altro raggio non ingombra.

A sofferir tormenti e caldi e gieli
Simili corpi la virtù dispone,
Che come fa non vuol ch'a noi si sveli.
Matto è chi spera, che nostra ragione
Possa trascorrer la infinita via,
Che tiene una Sustanzia in tre Persone.

State contenti, umana gente, al quia:

30 My spiritual form no more hinders the passage of the Sun's rays than does one of the spheres which compose the universe those proceeding from another.

32 Simili, like this which I bear. Virgil meets Dante's doubt before he has expressed it. In xxv. 20 he states a similar difficulty, and receives a fuller explanation.

37 Quia in its later meaning of "that," "qubox:" "Be content with the fact and do not search into the how or why." For use of adverb as substantive, see Diez iii. 289.
quia, for if you could have seen all no need was there that Mary should bring forth; and ye have seen desiring without fruition men such that their desire would have been set at rest, which is given them eternally for a grief. I speak of Aristotle and of Plato, and of many others.” And here he bowed his forehead, and said no more, and remained disquieted.

We were come therewithal to the foot of the mount. There we found the rock so steep that in vain would the legs be nimble. “Twixt Lerici and Turbia, the most desolate, the most broken landslip is beside this one a ladder, easy and open. "Now, who knows on which hand the mountain-side falls," said my Master, staying his step, "so that he may ascend who goes without wings?" And while that, holding his face low, he was examining the fashion of the road, and I was gazing up around the rock, on the left hand

La più rott a ruina è una scala.
Verso di quella, agevole ed aperta.
Or chi sa da qual man la costa cala,
Disse il Maestro mio, fermando il passo,
Sl che possa salir chi va senz' ala?
E mentre che tenendo il viso basso
Esaminava del cammin la mente,
Ed io mirava suso intorno al sasso,
Da man sinistra m'apparì una gente

* rimota via Gg.; romita \{ via ruina \} Cass.; romita via Land. Ald. W.

b ch' ei teneva, W.

50 Rotta ruina gives so very much better a sense than the reading which has the slight balance of authority, romita via, that I venture to adopt it, with Philal. and Bianchi, against the opinion of the majority.
Rotta ruina and rotta via are very much alike, and Turbia just above may easily have confused a scribe. Ruina, as in Inf. xii. 4.

54 Cf. iv. 27.

56 The Italian commentators understand mente of the mind of Virgil, whether as subject or object of esaminava. Blanc, in his "Erklärungen," calls "la mente del cammin," a "ganz unerhörte Metaphor;" but in his "Dictionary," while maintaining that it is daring, he believes it to be the true construction. Of this there can be little doubt. Mente is exactly equivalent to the Latin ingeni um (loci arvorum, &c.).

58 These are persons who have put off repentance till death, and have then died in contumacy of the Church.
appeared to me a folk of souls who were moving their feet toward us, and yet seemed not, so slow they came. "Raise," said I to my Master, "thy eyes. Lo, on this side is one who will give us counsel, if thou canst not have it of thyself." He looked at them, and with frank mien answered: "Let us go thitherward, for they come slowly; and thou confirm thy hope, sweet son."

Still was that people so far off, I mean after a thousand of our paces, as a good thrower would hurl with his hand, when they all drew up to the hard masses of the lofty bank, and stood firm and close, as he who goes in doubt stands still to look. "O ye who have made a good end, O spirits already elect," Virgil began, "by that peace which I think

D’ anime, che moviemo i pié ver noi,
E non parevan, sì venivan lente.
Leva, diss’ io al Maestro, gli occhi tuoi:
   Ecco di quà chi ne darà consiglio,
Se tu da te medesmò aver nol puoi.
Guardò a loro, e con libero piglio

Rispose: Andiamo in là, ch’ ei vengon piano,
   E tu ferma la speme, dolce figlio.
Ancora era quel popol di lontano,
   I’ dico dopo i nostri mille passi
Quanto un buon gittator traria con mano,
Quando si strinser tutti ai duri massi

Dell’ alta ripa, e stetter fermi e stretti,
Com’ a guardar, chi va dubbiando, stassi.
O ben finiti, o già spiriti eletti,
   Virgilio incominciò, per quella pace,

\[d\] Guardommi allora, Ald. Land. Bi.

59 Movieno for moveano. See Diez ii. 130.
is waited by you all, tell us where the mountain falls, so that it is possible to go upward; for loss of time displeases most who most knows." As the sheep issue from the folds by one, by two, by three, and the others stand timid, holding eye and muzzle to earth, and that which the first does the rest do too, coming close behind her if she stops, simple and quiet, and know not the why or wherefore; so saw I then move to come, the head of that fortunate flock, modest in face and dignified in gait. When those in front saw the light on the ground broken to the right side of

Ch' io credo che per voi tutti s' aspetti,
Ditene dove la montagna giace,
Si che possibil sia l' andare in suso:
Che 'l perder tempo a chi più sa, più spiace.
Come le pecorello escon del chiuso
Ad una, a due, a tre, e l' altre stanno
Timidette atterrando l' occhio e il muso,
E ciò che fa la prima, e l' altre fanno,
Addossandosi a lei s' ella s' arresta,
Semplici e quete, e lo 'mpерchè non sanno:
Sl' vid' io movere, a venir, la testa
Di quella mandria fortunata allotta,
Pudica in faccia, e nell' andare onesta.
Come color dinanzi vider rota
La luce in terra dal mio destro canto,

79 He uses the same simile Conv. i. 11.
89 It is still early morning, for but just now the Sun was shining red; and it is not till after some time that he has gone through 50 degrees of arc. Dante has therefore his left side towards the east, and these folk are approaching from the south (see also l. 58). The general direction of the course through Purgatory is with the Sun, i.e. from E. to W. by the N. (see iv. 60). By the first evening they have got somewhat me, so that the shadow was from me to the rock, they stayed and drew themselves a little back, and all the others that were coming after, not knowing why or wherefore, did the same. "Without demand from you, I declare to you that this man whom you see is a human body, whereby the Sun’s light is cloven on the earth. Marvel you not; but believe that not without power which comes from Heaven he seeks to surmount this wall." Thus the Master. And that worshipful folk said: "Turn, enter then before us," making a sign with the backs of their hands. And one of them

Si che l’ ombra era da me alla grotta, 90
Ristaro, e trasser sè indietro alquanto,
E tutti gli altri che venieno appresso,
Non sappiendo il perchè, fero altrettanto.
Senza vostra dimanda io vi confesso,
Che questo è corpo uman che voi vedete,
Perchè il lume del Sole in terra è fesso:
Non vi maravigliate; ma credete,
Che non senza virtù che dal Ciel vegna,
Cerca di soverchiar questa parete.
Così il Maestro : e quella gente degna, 100
Tornate, disse : intrate innanzi dunque,
Coi dossi delle man facendo segnata.

to the N., but not enough to see the setting Sun (vi. 57). On the second evening they have the sunset full in face (xv. 9, 141), and the next morning they start with the Sun at their backs (xix. 39), i.e. they are on the north side of the mountain. On the last evening they sleep on the west side, as appears from the fact that when they reach the summit, Dante has the morning Sun full on his face (xxvii. 133). It must be remembered that the time is just after the equinox.
began: "Whoever thou art, turn thy face as thou goest thus, give heed if yonder thou sawest me ever." I turned me to him and looked fixedly on him; fair-haired he was, and beautiful and of noble countenance; but one of his brows a stroke had divided. When I had humbly disclaimed to have ever seen him, he said: "Now look," and showed me a wound high on his breast. Then he said smiling: "I am Manfred, grandson of Constance the empress; wherefore I pray thee that when thou returnest thou go to my daughter, mother of the honour of Sicily

Ed un di loro incominciò: Chiunque
   Tu se', così andando volgi il viso:
   Pon mente, se di là mi vedi unque.
Io mi volsi ver lui, e guardai fisso:
   Biondo era e bello, e di gentile aspetto:
   Ma l' un de' cigli un colpo avea diviso.
Quando mi fui umilmente disdetto
   D' averlo visto mai, ei disse: Or vedi;
   E mostrommi una piaga a sommo il petto.
Poi disse sorridendo: Io son Manfredi
   Nipote di Gostanza Imperadrice:
   Ond' io ti prego, che quando tu riedi,
   Vadi a mia bella figlia, genitrice

103 This is Manfred, king of Sicily and Apulia, natural son of the emperor Frederick II., killed at the battle of Grandella, near Benevento, Feb. 26, 1266. Giovanni Villani (book vi.) gives sufficient evidence to justify his confession: "Orribil furon li peccati miei." But he was a stanch opponent of the Pope and Charles of Anjou.

112 Sorridendo. Foscolo has called attention to the beauty of this touch. His death-wound and the rage of his enemies are now only subjects for a smile.

115 Constance, wife of Peter of Aragon (see vii. 112), and mother of Frederick king of Sicily and James king of Aragon. Looking to and Aragon, and say to her the truth, if else be said. After that I had my form torn with two mortal stabs, I betook myself weeping to Him who willingly pardons. Horrible were my sins; but the infinite goodness has arms so wide that it receives that which turns back to it. If the pastor of Cosenza, who in the chase of me was sent by Clement, had then in God duly read that page, the bones of my body would still be at the bridge-head near Benevento,

Dell’ onor di Cicilia e d’ Aragona,
E dichi a lei il ver, s’ altro si dice.
Poscia ch’ i’ ebbe rota la persona
Di due punte mortali io mi rendei
Piangendo a quei che volentier perdona. 120

Orribil furon li peccati miei:
Ma la bontà infinita ha sì gran braccia,
Che prende ciò che si rivolge a lei.
Se il Pastor di Cosenza, che alla caccia
Di me fu messo per Clemente, allora
Avesse in Dio ben letta questa faccia,
L’ ossa del corpo mio sarieno ancora

the character of these princes, and especially to Dante’s own opinion of them as expressed in vii. 120 and elsewhere, there is a little difficulty about onor. But it should be remembered that it is their grandfather who is speaking, and that in his view some credit might be due to those who had to a certain extent avenged the house of Swabia on that of Anjou.

120 Quei in oblique cases is rare. But cf. Inf. ii. 104, Par. xvii. 93, and “per mala guardia di quegli che ’l custodiva,” Villani vi. 69. See note to vii. 96.

124 As an example of the blunders of copyists, it may be mentioned that four of the first five editions (1245) read “dico senza,” making of course absolute nonsense.

126 Faccia. “Per ciascuna banda del foglio.” Dict. Crusc., which refers to this passage.
under the guard of the heavy stone-heap. Now the rain washes them, and the wind moves them forth from the kingdom, hard by the Verde, whither he transported them with light put out. Through their malediction one is not so lost that the eternal love cannot return, so long as hope has any bloom of green. True it is that whoso dies in

In co’ del ponte presso a Benevento,
Sotto la guardia della grave mora.
Or le bagna la pioggia e muove il vento
Di fuor del regno, quasi lungo il Verde,
Ove le trasmutò a lume spento.
Per lor maladizion si non si perde,
Che non possa tornar l’ eterno amore,
Mentre che la speranza ha fior del verde.\(^e\)

\(^e\) E fuor del Ald.

132 Regno, of Naples, or Apulia; as always, when the word is used alone. Villani’s account, written evidently with this passage before his eyes (vii. 9) is as follows: “Imperocchè’ era scomunicato, non volle il re Carlo che fosse recato in luogo sacro; ma appiè del ponte di Benivento fu soppiemito, e sopra la sua fossa per ciascuno dell’ oste gittata una pietra; onde si fece grande mora di sassi. Ma per alcuni si disse, che poi per mandato del papa, il vescovo di Cosenza il trasse di quella sepoltura, e mandollo fuori dal Regno, e ch’ era terra di Chiesa, e fu sepolto lungo il fiume di Verde, a confini del Regno e di Campagna.” The last words show that Villani did not, with most of the older commentators, understand the Verde here mentioned to be the small stream which flows into the Tronto near Ascoli, but as is now generally thought, the Liris or Garigliano. See Blanc, who notices (Erklärungen) that in either case the body would have been taken into Church territory, whether the March of Ancona, or the Campagna of Rome.

135 Ha fior. Fior is used much as in Inf. xxv. 144, xxxiv. 26, but rather more literally. Others read è fior, and take it to allude to the practice, mentioned by Sacchetti, Nov. xli., of painting the bottom contumacy of holy Church, although at last he repents him, it behoves him to stay without this bank, for all the time that he has remained in his presumption, thirty-fold, if such decree does not become shortened by kindly prayers. Hereafter see if thou canst make me happy, revealing to my good Constance how thou hast seen me, and also this prohibition; for here through those yet there much may be gained.

Ver è, che quale in contumacia muore
Di Santa Chiesa, ancor che al fin si penta,
Star li convien da questa ripa in fure
Per ogni tempo, ch' egli è stato, trenta,
In sua presunzione, se tal decreto
Più corto per buon pregehi non diventa.
Vedi oramai se tu mi puoi far lieto,
Rivelando alla mia buona Gostanza,
Come m' hai visto, ed anco esto divieto:
Chè qui per quei di là molto s' avanza.

of a candle green. Cf. Petr. Son. xxvi., where "speme condotta al verde," is called by Gesualdo, in Giglio's edition of 1553, "metaphora de la candela," as though it were common. But, as Speroni says, "Il Petrarca crede imitar Dante, e s' inganna quanto alla cosa, e quanto alla lingua." The other reading seems unquestionably the best, and far more like Dante's manner. Green, it may be observed, is the colour denoting hope. M. Angelo's "Poichè d'ogni mia speme il verde è spento," is consistent with either explanation.
CANTO IV.

ARGUMENT.

They enter a gap in the hillside and begin to climb. Virgil explains the motion of the sun as seen in the hemisphere where they are. Dante talks with Belacqua, whom he finds among those who have delayed their repentance through indolence.

WHEN, by reason of delight, yea, or of pain, which any capacity of ours conceives, the soul fully collects itself thereto, it seems that it attends to no power more; and this is against that error, which believes that one soul above another is kindled in us. And therefore, when anything is

QUANDO per dilettanze ovver per doglie,
    Che alcuna virtù nostra comprenda,\(^a\)
L'anima bene ad essa si raccoglie,
Par ch' a nulla potenzia più intenda:
    E questo è contra quello error che crede

\(^{a}\) A. nostra vertute Cass. a. v. n. si comp. Gg.

1–19 See note at end of this Canto.
heard or seen of such sort as to hold the soul fast turned towards itself, the time goes by, and the man recks not thereof, for that which is listening to it is one power, and that which keeps the soul entire is another; the latter is as it were bound, and the former is at large.

Of this I had a true experience, hearing that spirit and marvelling. For full fifty degrees had the sun mounted, and I had not heeded, when we came where those spirits with one voice cried to us: “Here is what you ask!”

A larger opening many a time the villager hedges up with a forkful of his thorns, when the grape is growing brown,

Che un’ anima sovr’ altra in noi s’ accenda.
E perch’ quando s’ ode cosa o vede,
Che tenga forte a sè l’ anima volta,
Vassene il tempo, e l’ uom non se n’ avvede:
Ch’ altra potenzia è quella che l’ ascolta ;
   Ed altra è quella che ha l’ anima intera :
   Questa è quasi legata, e quella è sciolta.
Di ciò ebb’ io esperienzia vera,
   Udendo quello spirto ed ammirando ;
   Chè ben cinquanta gradi salito era
Lo Sole, ed io non m’ era accorto, quando
   Venimmo dove quell’ anime ad una Gridaro a noi : qui è vostro dimando.
Maggiore aperta molte volte impruna
   Con una forcatella di sue spine,
   L’ uom della villa, quando l’ uva imbruna,

8 I have rather emphasised the subjunctive tenga to mark the exact equivalence of the construction with the similar one in Latin.
than was the gap from which my leader mounted, and I after him alone, when the troop parted from us. One goes to Sanleo and descends on Noli; one mounts over Bismantova to the summit, with only feet; but here behoves it that one fly, I mean with the swift wings and with the feathers of the great desire, following that guidance which gave me hope and made a light for me. We mounted within the broken rock, and its surface grazed us on either

Che non era la calla, onde saline

Lo Duca mio ed io appresso soli,
Come da noi la schiera si partine.
Vassi in Sanleo, e discendesi in Noli:
Montasi su Bismantova in cacume
Con esso i piè: ma qui convien ch' uom voli,
Dico con l' ali snelle e con le piume
Del gran disio diretro a quel condotto,
Che speranza mi dava, e facea lume.
Noi salvavam per entro 'l sasso rotto,
E d' ogni lato ne stringea lo stremo,

b Lo calle Gg. etc. La calle, 23.

22 Calla; so ix. 123; callaia, xxv. 7, is the commoner form.
25-26 San Leo in the duchy of Urbino, not far from San Marino.
Noli, on the western Riviera between Albenga and Savona. Bismantova, said to be a mountain near Reggio. "Cacume è una molto ripida montagna in campagna," says Landino, and Vellutello follows him.
This is of course absurd.
27 Con esso i pie; so "con esso i due," xxiv. 98, etc. For this use of esso indeclinable, see Diez ii. 426. Uom here exactly = Fr. on (homo), cf. l. 90, Diez iii. 280.
28 Condotto; so used also Conv. i. 11.
31 There seems no reason for rejecting the Florentine form salvam, which is found in most early edd. and many MSS.
side, and the ground below us required both feet and hands. When we were on the upper rim of the lofty bank, on the open mountain-side: "My master," said I, "what course shall we make?" And he to me: "Let no step of thine descend; only gain ground upwards on the mountain behind me, until some wise escort appears for us." The summit was lofty, that it surpassed our sight, and the mountain side full steeper than a band from mid-quadrant to centre. I was weary, when I began: "O sweet father, turn thee and behold how I remain alone, if thou stay not." "O son," said he, "draw thyself as far as there," pointing me out a terrace not much above, which on that side circles the

E piedi e man voleva il suol di sotto.
Quando noi fummo in su l' orlo supremo
Dell' alta ripa, alla scoperta piaggia,
Maestro mio, diss' io, che via faremo?
Ed egli a me: nessun tuo passo caggia:
Pur suso al monte dietro a me acquista,
Fin che n' appaia alcuna scorta saggia.
Lo sommo er' alto che vincea la vista,
E la costa superba più assai,
Che da mezzo quadrante a centro lista.
Io era lasso, quando cominciai:
O dolce padre, volgiti e rimira,
Com' io rimango sol, se non ristai.
Figliuol mio, disse, infin quivi ti tira,
Additandomi un balzo poco in sue,
Che da quel lato il poggio tutto gira.

38 Acquista, cf. Inf. xxvi. 126.
42 More than forty-five degrees—a very sufficient inclination, as all mountaineers know.
48 Da quel lato, "on that side of," i.e. "above" where we were.
whole steep. His words so spurred me that I forced myself, climbing behind him until I had the ring beneath my feet. There we both sate us down, turned towards the east, whence we had mounted, for to look backward is wont to please any man. First I directed my eyes to the low shores; afterwards I raised them to the sun, and wondered that we were smitten by him on the left. The poet well perceived that I was standing stupefied before the chariot of the light, where between us and Aquilo he was entering.

Sl mi spronaron le parole sue,
Ch’ io mi sforzai, carpando appresso lui,
Tanto che il cinghio sotto i piè mi fue.
A seder ci ponemmo ivi ambedui
Volti a levante, ond’ eravam saliti,
Chè suole a riguardar giovare altrui.
Gli occhi prima drizzai a’ bassi liti,
Poscia gli alzai al Sole, ed ammirava,
Che da sinistra n’ eravam feriti.
Ben s’ avvide il Poeta, che io restava
Stupido tutto al carro della luce,
Ove tra noi ed Aquilone intrava.

< Perchè suole a guardar Gg.

51 Tanto che, so Fr. tant que. The indicative follows because the completion of the action is past. Diez iii. 321.
54 For this use of altrui, as an indefinite pronoun, cf. Inf. i. 18. See Diez iii. 76. Infinitive with a, after giovare, is not common, but a is sometimes almost “otiase.” Thus M. Ang. Sonnet 77, “a trovar grazia . . . è raro.” In French we have “il lui plait à faire qqch.”
56 sqq. See note to iii. 89. da sinistra, cf. Conv. iii. 5. vedrebbe quello andarsi per lo braccio sinistro.
Wherefore he to me: "If Castor and Pollux had been in company of that mirror, which leads of its light both upward and down, thou wouldst have seen the fiery Zodiac rotate yet closer to the Bears, unless it had issued forth from its old road. How that is, if thou wouldst be able to conceive, with inward recollection picture to thyself that Sion stands with this mountain in suchwise on the earth, that both have a single horizon and diverse hemispheres; whence, if thy intellect considers clearly, thou wilt see how it behoves that the road, whereto on to his own mishap

Ond' egli a me: se Castore e Polluce
   Fossero in compagnia di quello specchio,
   Che su e giù del suo lume conduce,
Tu vedresti il Zodiaco rubecchio
   Ancora all' Orse più stretto rotare,
Se non uscisse fuor del cammin vecchio.
   Come ciò sia, se il vuoi poter pensare,
Dentro raccolto immagina Sion
   Con questo monte in su la terra stare,
Sl ch' ambedue hanno un solo orizon,
   E diversi emisferi: onde la strada,
Che mal non seppe carreggiar Feton,
Vedrai com' a costui convien che vada

61 I.e. if it were the month of June, when the sun is in Gemini, that part of the Zodiac in which he then would be nearer the north.
62 Specchio. So of the planet Saturn, Par. xxi. 18. The light they reflect is from God.
70 See note to ii. 1.
72 Dante is fond of referring to the legend of Phaethon. See xxix. 117, Par. xxxi. 125.
Phaethon knew not how to drive, should pass on the one side of this mount, when it is on the other side of that."

"Certes, my master," said I, "never saw I aught so clearly as I [now] discern, there where my intellect seemed wanting, that the mid-circle of heavenly movement, which in a certain art is called Equator, and which ever remains between the sun and the winter, here, for the reason that thou sayest, is distant towards the north, by so much as the Hebrews saw it towards the warm quarter. But if it please thee, willingly would I know how far we have to go, for the hill mounts more than my eyes are able." And he to me: "This mountain is such that ever at the beginning below it is hard, and the more one mounts, the less it pains

Dall' un, quando a colui dall' altro fianco,
Se l' intelletto tuo ben chiara bada.
Certo, Maestro mio, diss' io, unquanco
Non vid' io chiaro sì, com' io discerno,
Ò là dove mio 'ngegno parea manco,
Che l' mezzo cerchio del moto supremo,
Che si chiama Equatore in alcun' arte, 80
E che sempre riman tra il Sole e il verno,
Per la ragion, che di', quinzi si parte
Verso settentrion, quanto gli Ebrei
Vedevan lui verso la calda parte.
Ma, se a te piace, volentieri saprei,
Quanto avemo ad andar, chè il poggio sale
Più che salir non posson gli occhi miei.
Ed egli a me: Questa montagna è tale,
Che sempre al cominciari di sotto è grave,

80 Alcun' arte; sc. astronomy.
89, 90 The way of repentance is hard at first, but becomes easy by persistence.
him. Wherefore, when it shall appear so pleasant to thee that to go upon it is to thee as easy as to go down with a favouring stream on shipboard, then wilt thou be at the end of this road; there expect to repose thy weariness: more I answer not, and this I know for true."

And, as he had said his word, a voice from hard by sounded: "Mayhap that thou wilt first have need to sit." At the sound of it each of us turned, and we saw on the left a great stone, whereof neither I nor he had before taken heed. We drew thither; and there were persons

E quanto più va su, e men fa male.  90
Pero quand' ella ti parrà soave
Tanto, che il su andar ti fia leggiero,
Come a seconda il giù andar per nave:
Allor sarai al fin d' esto sentiero:
Quivi di riposar l' affanno aspetta:
Più non rispondo, e questo so per vero.
E, com' egli ebbe sua parola detta,
Una voce di presso sonò, Forse
Che di sedere in prima avrai distretta.
Al suon di lei ciascun di noi si torse,
E vedemmo a mancina un gran petrone,
Del qual nè io nè ei prima s' accorse.
 Là ci traemmo : ed ivi eran persone,

93 Seconda, or "a favouring breeze."
100 Si torse; in Dante, torcersi = "to turn at right angles," "to face;" volgersi = "to turn right round," "to face about;" tornare = "to turn back to a former position." This distinction, however, does not appear to have been maintained in Italian.
103 Those who have postponed repentance to the last moment through indolence.
who stood in the shade behind the rock, as one through listlessness sets him to stand. And one of them who seemed to me weary, was sitting and embracing his knees, holding his face down low between them. "O my sweet Lord," I cried, "cast eye on him who shows himself more careless than if sloth were his sister." Then he turned him to us, and gave heed, only moving his face upward by the thigh, and said: "Go up thou, for thou art strong." I knew then who he was; and that struggle which was still quickening my breath a little, did not hinder me from going to him; and after I had reached him he hardly raised his head, saying: "Hast thou quite perceived how

Che si stavano all' ombra dietro al sasso,
Como uom per negligenza a star si pone.
Ed un di lor che mi sembrava lasso,
Sedeva ed abbracciava le ginocchia,
Tenendo il viso giù tra esse basso.
O dolce Signor mio, diss' io, adocchia
Colui che mostra se più negligente,
Che se pigrizia fosse sua sirocchia.
Allor si volse a noi, e pose mente,
Movendo il viso pur su per la coscia,
E disse: or va su tu che se' valente.
Conobbi allor chi era: e quell' angoscia,
Che m' avacciava un poco ancor la lena,
Non m' impedì l' andare a lui: e poscia,
Ch' a lui fui giunto, alzò la testa appena,
Dicendo, Hai ben veduto, come il Sole

119 Bianchi compares De Monarchia ii. i: "Cum causam cognoscimus, eos qui sunt in admiratione restantes quadam derisione despicimus." I am disposed, however, to think that there is a far finer dramatic touch in the passage, as Landino sees. His comment is "Sempre i pigri scherniscono chi e diligente ad investigare alcuna cosa degna."
the Sun guides his chariot by thy right shoulder?" His lazy gestures, and his curt words moved my lips a little to a smile; then I began: "Belacqua, henceforth it grieves me not for thee; but tell me, why art thou seated here? Awaitest thou escort, or has thy wonted habit only retaken thee?" And he: "Brother, what boots it to go up? for the bird of God who sits above the gate would not permit me to go to the torments. Behoves that first the heaven must circle round me [waiting] outside thereof, for so

Dall' omero sinistro il carro mena?
Gli atti suoi pigri, e le corte parole
Mosson le labbra mie un poco a riso:
Poi cominciai: Belacqua, a me non duole
Di te omai: ma dimmi, perché assiso
Quiritta sei? attendi tu iscorta,
O pur lo modo usato t' ha ripriso?
Ed ei: Frate, l' andar su che porta?
Chè non mi lascerebbe ire ai martiri
L' uccel di Dio, che siede in su la porta.
Prima convien, che tanto il Ciel m'aggiri

120  d  angel Bi. etc. uscier Cr.

123 Belacqua ( = Bevilacqua) fu un eccelente fabricatore di cetre e di altri istromenti musicali, ma uomo pigissimo. Bianchi.

125 Quiritta. So xvii. 86.

130 Philalethes has "der Pförtner Gottes," following the Cruscan edition. There does not, however, appear to be much MS. support for this otherwise satisfactory reading. But cf. ix. 104, and vid. Blanc, Dict. s.v. uscier. The slight familiarity of the term is not unsuitable in the mouth of the easy-going Belacqua.

130, 131 "Conviene che il cielo mi giri tanto tempo fuori di essa porta di Purgatorio cioè che passi tanto tempo, quanto tempo passò in vita.— Landino. This use of aggirare is similar to that in Conv. iii. 5: "Il mondo dal Sole è girato," and in the Canzone of the same book.
long a time as it did in my life, because I delayed to the end my pious sighs: if prayer first helps me not, such as may rise up from a heart that lives in grace; what avails other, which is not heard in heaven?"

And already the poet was mounting before me, and was saying: "Come now away, see how the meridian is touched by the Sun, and on the verge the night covers already with her foot Morocco."

Di fuor da essa, quanto fece in vita,\textsuperscript{e}
Perch' io indugiai al fin li buon sospiiri,
Se orazione in prima non m' aita,
Che surga su di cuor che in grazia viva:
L' altra che val, che in Ciel non è udita?\textsuperscript{f}
E già il Poeta innanzi mi saliva,
E dicea: Vienne omai: vedi ch' è tocco
Meridian dal Sole, ed alla riva
Cuopre la notte già col piè Marocco.

\textsuperscript{e} quant' io feci Gg. 1234 Lomb. ; quanto feci Cass. \textsuperscript{f} gradita Ald.

\textsuperscript{137} Tocco. For this syncopated form of the participle, see Diez ii. p. 138.
\textsuperscript{139} Morocco being on the eastern horizon of Purgatory, as India (ii. 5) is on the western.

\textbf{NOTE TO LINES 1–12.}

The general drift of these lines is plain enough; but there is a point to be noticed which seems to have escaped attention, though it has some importance as bearing on Dante's philosophy. Most, or all, the commentators have taken virtù and potenza as signifying the same thing;
thus Bianchi: "Per virtù o potenza dell'anima s'intendono generalmente le facoltà per cui opera." That virtus and potentia are used indiscriminately by the schoolmen to represent the Aristotelian δύναμις, as opposed to actus, ενέργεια, there can be no doubt; but there is also a sense in which virtus is by no means the same as potentia, though Aristotle had only one word for the two meanings. Still he says (Metaph. viii. 1) πάλιν δ' αὐτάς αἰ δύναμεις λέγοντα, ἢ τοῦ μόνον ποιῆσαι ἢ παθεῖν ἢ τοῦ καλοῦ. Cf. iv. 12. Now this second δύναμις, not the mere potentiality of doing, but capacity of doing well, issues when manifested in ἀρετή, which (Eth. Nic. i. 6) οὔ δὲ ἢ ἡ ἀρετὴ αὐτὸ τε ἐν αὐτήλει καὶ τὸ ἐργον αὐτοῦ εὖ ἀποδίδωσι. This probably accounts for the use of virtus as equivalent to the good δύναμις. At any rate Aquinas (S.T. 2.1. Q. 55. Art. 1.) says: "Virtus nominat quamdam potentiae perfectionem. . . . Id enim in quod ultimo potentia potest, est id quod dicitur virtus rei." Dante clearly indicates this distinction. Thus in Canto xvii. 73-75 at the approach of night, this virtù of walking "melts away," but the possa is only suspended. So in the same Canto, at the sight of the resplendent angel it is his virtù which fails; but in the presence of God (Par. xxxiii. 142) "alla fantasia mancò possa." Comparing these and the present passage with Eth. Nic. x. 5, 3,4 οἱ γὰρ φίλαυλοι δύναμος τοῖς λογίσις προσέχειν εἰς κατακούσων αὐλοντος, μᾶλλον χαίροντες αὐλητικῇ τῆς παρούσῃ ενέργειας; and οἱ γὰρ ἡδίων τὴν ὡτεραν ἔκκρουε, ἐστε μηδ' ενεργεῖν κατὰ τὴν έτερα, we see that Dante brings his virtù sometimes very near ενέργεια. We must, however, I think, stop short of this, and explain as follows: "When any one 'power' of the soul is manifesting itself in the due performance (bene si raccoglie) of any of its functions—in this case the sensitive in its function of listening—the soul cannot be acted on by another; in that case that which keeps the soul 'entire' and the various 'powers' duly balanced, and by which we are conscious of the flight of time." This last δύναμις τῆς φυχῆς, it may be remarked, seems to have been discovered since Aristotle's classification (De Anima ii. 3) was made; nor does Dante, in his expositions of Aristotle's doctrine (Conv. iii. 2. iv. 7) specify it. It may be taken to be a department of τὸ διανοητικόν, intellectiva. The argument against the Platonic doctrine (Timaeus 69) of separate souls, which Dante incidentally deduces from the inability of two potentes to manifest themselves simultaneously, is almost directly from Aquinas, who says (S. T. 1. 1. lxxvi. 3): "Si ponamus animam corpori unici sicut formam, omnino impossibile videtur plures animas per essentiam differentes in uno corpore esse. . . . Apparet hoc esse impossibile, per hoc quod una operatio (here is ἐνεργεῖα again) animae cum fuerit intensa, impedit aliam."

There seems to be a little difference of opinion as to which potensia is legata and which sciolta. See Giuliani's note to Conv. ii. 14, and Philal. here. It is I think pretty clear that we must take sciolta as = free to perform its function," and therefore as applying to the faculty of hearing.
CANTO V.

ARGUMENT.

They are overtaken by another troop, certain of whom, on learning that Dante is a living man, make themselves known to him. These are they who have been cut off by violence, but have repented at the point of death. Among them are Jacopo del Cassero, Buonconte da Montefeltro, and Pia. They recount the manner of their deaths.

I had already parted from those shades, and was following the tracks of my leader, when behind me, pointing the finger, one cried: “Look, for it seems that the ray illuminates not to the left of him who is lowermost, and as a living man he seems to demean himself.” I turned my eyes back at the sound of this word, and saw them

Io era già da quell’ ombre partito,
   E seguitava l’ orme del mio Duca,
   Quando diretro a me, drizzando il dito,
Una grido: Ve’, che non par che luca
   Lo raggio da sinistra a quel di sotto,
   E come vivo par che si condula.
Gli occhi rivolsi al suon di questo motto,
   E vidile guardar per maraviglia.
gaze for wonder at me, me only, and the light that was broken.

"Why does thy mind so much perplex itself," said my master, "that thou slackenest thy going? What is it to thee, that which is whispered there? Come behind me, and let the folk talk; stand like a firm tower which never shakes its top for blast of winds. For ever the man, in whom thought wells up over thought, removes far from himself his mark, because the onset of the second dissolves the first." What could I reply, if not "I come"? I said it, overspread somewhat with that colour which makes a man worthy at times of pardon.

Pur me, pur me, e il lume ch' era rotto.
Perchè l' animo tuo tanto s'impiglia,
Disse il Maestro, che l' andare allenti?
Che ti fa ciò che quivi si pispiglia?
Vien dietro a me, e lascia dir le genti,
Sta come torre ferma, che non crolla a
Giammai la cima per soffiar de' venti
Chè sempre l' uomo, in cui pensier rampolla
Sovra pensier, da sè dilunga il segno,
Perchè la foga l' un dell' altro insolla.
Che poteva io ridir, se non: Io vegno?
Dissilo, alquanto del color consperso,
Che fa l' uom di perdon tal volta degno

a Ferro Bi.

10 Impigliare is used in its literal sense in line 83, metaphorically as here, in xiv. 117.
16-18 "The man who allows one thought to follow on another, fails to keep his object clearly before him."
18 Insolla; for solo, see xxvii. 40.
And therewithal along the hillside across were coming folk in front of us a little, singing Miserere, verse by verse.
When they perceived that by reason of my body I did not give place to the passage of the rays, they changed their chant into an O long and hoarse, and two of them in guise of messengers ran to meet us, and demanded of us: “Make us acquainted with your condition.” And my master: “Ye can go your way, and report to them that sent you that the body of this man is very flesh. If for the sight of his shadow they stood still, as I opine, enough is answered them; let them do him honour, and he may

E intanto per la costa da traverso
Venivan genti innanzi a noi un poco,
Cantando Miserere a verso a verso.
Quando s’ accorser ch’ io non dava loco,
Per lo mio corpo, al trapassar de’ raggi,
Mutar lor canto in un O lungo e roco,
E due di loro in forma di messaggi
Corsero incontr’ a noi, e dimandarne.
Di vostra condizion fatene saggi.
E il mio Maestro: Voi potete andarne,
E ritarre a color che vi mandaro,
Che il corpo di costui è vera carne.
Se per veder la sua ombra restaro,
Com’ io avviso, assai è lor risposto:
Faccianli onore, ed esser può lor caro.

24 Miserere, i.e. the 51st (or in the Vulgate 50th) Psalm.
26 Per lo mio corpo. I have followed Blanc and Biagioli in taking per as equivalent to the Latin prae, as in iv. 1, and frequently.
Lombardi takes it as = per “the passage of the rays through my body.”
The former seems better to suit the order of the words.
be dear to them.” Never saw I kindled vapours so swiftly cleave at early night the clear sky, nor, as the sun is falling, August clouds that these did not return upward in less time, and arrived there they with the others wheeled round to us, like a troop which goes without rein. “This folk which presses on us is many and they come to beg of thee,” said the poet, “wherefore only go on, and in thy going listen.” They came crying: “O spirit, that goest to be happy with those limbs which thou hadst at thy birth, slacken thy

Vapori accesi non vid’ io sì tosto
Di prima notte mai fender sereno,
Nè, Sol calando, nuvole d’ Agosto,
Che color non tornasser suso in meno,
E giunti là, con gli altri a noi dier volta,
Come schiera che corre senza freno.
‘Questa gente che preme a noi, è molta,
E vengonti a pregar, disse il Poeta,
Però pur va, ed in andando ascolta.’
O anima, che vai per esser lieta
Con quelle membra, con le quai nascesti, Vènian gridando, un poco il passo queta.

b Messa notte Ald.

c E imaginando G8.

37 Following Aristotle (Meteorol. i. 4) he regards shooting-stars and “summer” lightning as different forms of the same phenomenon, considering both due to kindled vapour. This is obviously the right interpretation, and that which takes nuvole d’Agosto as the subject and not the object of fendere, for the motion of clouds is never so great as to suggest extreme rapidity. Cf. Par. Lost iv. 556.
40 Che non = Latin quin.
48 membra. So usually; but sometimes membre, as vi. 147. pace a little. Look if thou hast ever seen any one of us, so that thou mayest bear news of him there; why goest thou, prithee? why dost thou not stay? We were all once slain by violence, and sinners up to our last hour; then light of heaven made us conscious, so that repenting and forgiving, we issued forth of life reconciled to God, who pricks our hearts with the desire to see him.” And I: “For all that I gaze in your faces, I do not recognise any one; but if aught that I can do pleases you, O spirits born to bliss, do ye say it, and I will do it for the sake of that peace, which makes me, following the feet of such a guide, seek it from world to world."

Guarda se alcun di noi unque vedesti,
Sì che di lui di là novelle porti:
Deh perché vai? deh perché non t’arresti?
Noi fummo già tutti per forza morti,
E peccatori infino all’ultim’ora:
Quivi lume del Ciel ne fece accorti
Sì, che pentendo e perdonando, fuora
Di vita uscimmo a Dio pacificati,
Che del disio di sè veder n’accora.
Ed io: Perchè ne’ vostri visi guati,
Non riconosco alcun, ma s’a voi piace
Cosa ch’io possa, spiriti ben nati,
Voi dite ed io farò per quella pace,
Che, dietro a’ piedi di sì fatta guida,
Di mondo in mondo cercar mi si face.

\[d \text{ Di perché . . . none arr. Gg.}\]

\[51 \text{-perchè vai} \text{ seems a sort of formula. Cf. ii. 90.}\]
\[57 \text{Se; so si cercar in l. 63, corresponding precisely with the Latin use. Accora. Inf. xv. 82, cf. iii. 3.}\]
\[58 \text{For the use of perché, cf. vi. 38 and xvii. 15, and see Diez iii. 332.}\]
And one began: "Each one puts his faith in thy good offices, without thy swearing it, so only that want of power cut not will away. Whence I, who speak alone before the rest, pray thee, if ever thou see the land which lies between Romagna and Charles's land, that thou wouldst be gracious to me of thy prayers in Fano, so that on my behalf supplication be well made, that I may have power to purge my heavy offences. Thence sprang I, but the deep wounds, whence issued the blood whereon my soul held its seat, were made for me in the midst of the sons of

Ed uno incominciò: Ciascun si fida
Del beneficio tuo senza giurarlo,
Pur che il voler nonpossa non ricida.
Ond' io, che solo, innanzi agli altri parlo,
Ti prego, se mai vedi quel paese,
Che siede tra Romagna e quel di Carlo,
Che tu mi sie de' tuoi pieghi cortese
In Fano sì, che ben per me s' adori,
Perch' io possa purgar le gravi offese.
Quindi fu' io, ma li profondi fori,
Ond' uscì il sangue, in sul qual io sedea,

64 This is Jacopo del Cassero of Fano, formerly podestà of Bologna; who was assassinated by order of Azzo d'Este while on his way to assume the same office at Milan (Bianchi). The date is given as 1298, but as peace between Bologna and Ferrara was only made, after a three years' war, in May 1299 (Villani viii. 28), this murder could hardly have been committed earlier. If he had been killed by an open enemy he would hardly speak as he does. A Jacopo de Fano is mentioned by Villani, vii. 120, among a number of Guelf chiefs.
65 Quel di Carlo = the kingdom of Apulia.
74 Io; the soul being that which preserves the personal identity.
Antenor, there where I trusted to be most secure; he of Esti bade do it, who had me in wrath far enough beyond what justice willed. But if I had fled towards La Mira when I was overtaken at Oriaco, still should I be on that side where they breathe. I ran to the marsh, and the cane-brake and the mud entangled me so that I fell, and there saw I a lake form itself on the ground from my veins."

Then said another: "I pray so may that desire be fulfilled which draws thee to the lofty mount, with kindly piety help mine. I was of Montefeltro, I am Buonconte;

Fatti mi furo in grembo agli Antenori,
Là dov’io più sicuro esser credea:
Quel da Esti il fe’ far, che m’avea in ira
Assai più là che il dritto non volea.
Ma s’io fossi fuggito inver La Mira,
Quand’io fui sovraggiunto ad Oriaco,
Ancor sarei di là, dove si spira.
Corsi al palude, e le cannucce e il braco
M’impigliar sì, ch’io caddi, e lì vid’io
Delle mie vene farsi in terra laco.
Poi disse un’altro: Deh, se quel disio
Si compia che ti tragge all’alto monte,
Con buona pietate aiuta il mio.

75 Antenori, Paduans. "Hic tamen ille urbem Patavi sedesque locavit Teucrorum."—Virg. Æn. i. 252. Philalethes thinks with an allusion to their treacherous understanding with Azzo, Antenor being one of the typical traitors, after whom a quarter of hell is named.
79,80 La Mira and Oriaco. Two small towns on the Brenta between Padua and Venice.
81 "I should still be in the world of living men."
85 See note to ii. 16.
Joan, or any other, has no care of me; wherefore I go among these with lowered brow." And I to him: "What force or what adventure led thee so far astray from Campaldino, that thy sepulture has never been known?" "Oh," answered he, "at foot of the Casentino a stream goes across, which has to name Archiano, which takes its rise above the hermitage in Apennine. Where its name becomes

Io fui di Montefeltro, io son Buonconte:
Giovanna, o altri non ha di me cura;
Perch' io vo tra costor con bassa fronte.

Ed io a lui: Qual forza, o qual ventura
Ti traviò sì fuor di Campaldino,
Che non si seppe mai tua sepoltura?
Oh, rispos' egli, appiè del Casentino
Traversa un' acqua che ha nome l' Archiano,
Che sovra l' Ermo nasce in Apennino.

Dove 'l vocabol suo diventa vano,

La've Gg. Ald. Land. Bi. etc.

88 Buonconte da Montefeltro fought on the side of Arezzo and the Ghibellines, at the battle of Campaldino or Certomondo, in the upper valley of the Arno (called the Casentino) on June 11, 1289. On the other side were the Guelfs of Tuscany, with Florence at the head, in whose ranks Dante himself fought. The men of Arezzo were beaten and their leaders slain. See Villani vii. 131.

96 L'Ermo; the monastery of Camaldoli.

97 Where it falls into the Arno, and loses its own name. The point is just above Bibbiena. The reading la 've is probably an instance of a very common source of corruptions in a text. Nome (which is found in some MSS.) was no doubt written as a gloss on vocabol. Then it got substituted for it. Then some one prefixed la to dove to make the line scan. Then vocabol got restored, and to get rid of a superfluous syllable, dove was cut down to 've.
of no avail came I, pierced in the throat and staining the plain with blood. There I lost my sight, and my speech finished with the name of Mary, and there I fell, and my flesh alone remained. I will tell the truth, and do thou repeat it among the living; the Angel of God took me, and he of Hell cried: ‘O thou from heaven, why robbest thou me? Thou bearest away for thyself the eternal part of this man, for one little tear which takes him from me; but with the other part will I take other order.’ Thou knowest well how in the air collects itself that moist vapour which returns to water as soon as it mounts where the cold con-

Arriva’ io forato nella gola,
Fuggendo a piede, e sanguinando il piano.
Quivi perdeì la vista, e la parola
Nel nome di Maria finì, e quivi
Caddi, e rimase la mia carne sola.
Io dirò il vero, e tu il ridì tra i vivi:
L’Angel di Dio mi prese, e quel d’ Inferno
Gridava: O tu dal Ciel, perchè mi privi?
Tu te ne porti di costui l’ eterno
Per una lagrimetta che ’l mi toglie,
Ma io farò dell’ altro altro governo.
Ben sai come nell’ aer si raccoglie
Quell’ umido vapor che in acqua riede,
Tosto che sale dove il freddo il coglie.

102 Rimane is a technical word for being killed in battle. See Villani passim.
104 Compare the account of his father’s end, Inf. xxvii. 113.
108 Faro governo; so Inf. xxvii. 47.
109-111 ἦ ἀγμὶς ψυχομένη . . . καὶ γίνεται ὅθωρ ἢ κατὰ ἀνέροι.
denses it. Thither came that evil will, which seeks evil only with its intelligence, and moved the vapour and the wind through the power which its nature gave. Then, when the day was spent, he covered the valley from Pratomagno to the great ridge with clouds, and made overcast the heaven above, so that the teeming air was turned to water; the rain fell, and to the trenches came so much of it as the earth did not endure; and as it came together into great streams, it rushed so swift towards the royal river that naught held it back. My body, cold,

Giunse quel mal voler, che pur mal chiede
Con l' intelletto, e mosse il fumo e il vento
Per la virtù, che sua natura diede.
Indì la valle, come il di fu spento,
Da Pratomagno al gran giogo copersi
Di nebbia, e il ciel di sopra fece intento
Si, che il pregno aere in acqua si conversè:
La pioggia cadde, e ai fossati venne
Di lei ciò che la terra non soffersi:
E come a' rivi grandi si convenne,
Ver lo fiume real tanto veloce
Si ruindò, che nulla la ritenne.

h il giel Gg. W.

113 Gran giogo, the main ridge of the Apennine, which forms the east side of the Casentino, the ridge of Pratomagno being on the west.
114 Fiume real, usually understood to mean the Arno, though Scart. thinks the Archiano. The question is not very important; but the former seems to have the best claim to the epithet.
hard upon its mouth the swollen Archiano found; and that hurried it into the Arno, and loosened on my breast the cross, which I made of myself when the pain overcame me; it rolled me by the banks and by the bottom; then with its booty covered me and girt me."

"Ah! when thou art returned to the world, and rested from thy long journey," the third spirit followed on the second, "be mindful of me, that am Pia. Siena gave me birth, Maremma undid me; he knows it, who, ringed as I was before, had espoused me with his own gem."

Locorpo mio gelato in su la foce
   Trovò l' Archian rubesto ; e quel sospinse
   Nell' Arno, e sciolse al mio petto la croce,
Ch' io fei di me quando il dolor mi vinse :
   Voltommi per le ripe, e per lo fondo ;
   Poi di sua preda mi coperse e cinse.

Deh, quando tu sarai tornato al mondo,
   E riposato della lunga via,
   Seguitò il terzo spirito al secondo,
Ricorditi di me, che son la Pia :
   Siena mi fe, disfrecemi Maremma
   Salsi colui che innanellata pria,
Disposato m' avea con la sua gemma.

In su, "just over," i.e. "close upon;" in this sense more often of time, as xxvii. 38.
139 Preda, the stones and earth which it carried down.
133 Pia Guastelloni, married first to a Tolomei, then to Nello Pannocchieschi, of Castel della Pietra; murdered by order of her second husband, on a suspicion of infidelity, at a castle in the Sienese Maremma.
135 Salsi = se lo sa. So xxxi. 90. This use of the reflexive form cf. vi. 2) must be distinguished from its use as equivalent to passive e.g. in line 93.
136 The early edd. read disposando. The more recent editions disposato, which is decidedly preferable in point of sense. See Bianchi's note.
CANTO VI.

ARGUMENT.

Dante speaks with other spirits, among whom is Peter de la Brosse. Virgil enlightens him on the subject of prayer for those in Purgatory. They meet Cordello of Mantua, who greets Virgil, when he learns that he is his countryman. Dante inveighs against the divisions of Italy and the Emperor's neglect, and especially against his own city of Florence.

When the game of hazard breaks up, he who loses remains sorrowfully recalling the throws, and learns by his grief; with the other, all the folk go their way; one goes before,

Quando si parte il giuoco della zara
Colui che perde si riman dolente,
Ripetendo le volte, e tristo impara:

1 Zara played with three dice. See Blanc, Erklärungen. Philalethes, following Buti, says that the thrower backed the numbers from 7–14, and when any of these turned up cried zara = zero. The odds are considerably in favour of the thrower, and this the loser finds out by experience. Vallutello, who gives a somewhat different account, says that it is also called ciansa = chance.
and one catches him from behind, and another on one side brings himself to his remembrance. He stays him not, and listens to one and the other; the man to whom he reaches his hand makes no more press, and thus he defends himself from the jostling. Such was I in that thick crowd, turning to them here and there my face and promising, I got me clear of it. Here was the Aretine, who from the fierce arms of Ghino di Tacco had his death; and the other who was drowned while running in the rout. Here was praying

Con l’ altro se ne va tutta la gente:
Qual va dinanzi, e qual direttro il prende,
E qual da lato gli si reca a mente:
Ei non s’ arresta, e questo e quello intende:
A cui porge la man più non fa pressa:
E così dalla calca si difende.
Tal era io in quella turba spessa,
Volgendo a loro e qua e là la faccia,
E promettendo mi sciogliea da essa.
Quivi era l’ Aretin, che dalle braccia
Fiere di Ghino di Tacco ebbe la morte,
E l’ altro ch’ annegò correndo in caccia.

13 Benincasa of Arezzo being acting podestà of Siena put to death the brother of Ghino di Taceo, a famous highwayman, and was himself slain by Ghino while sitting in the Papal audit office at Rome. For an amusing passage in Ghino’s history, see Boccaccio, Decam. Day x. nov. 2.

15 One of the Tarlati of Arezzo. It does not seem certain whether he was in the “chase” as pursuer or pursued. One story makes him among the fugitives at Campaldino. (Land. says Monteaperto, but there do not seem to have been any Aretines engaged there.) His name is given variously as Guzzo, Ciacco, and Cione. Both he and the next named, Federigo, son of Guido Novello of Battifolle, met their with his hands outspread, Frederick Novello, and he of Pisa who made the good Marzucco show his fortitude. I saw Count Orso; and the spirit divided from its body through hate and envy, as he said, not for fault committed, Peter de la Brossé I mean; and here let the dame of Brabant take forethought while she is in this world, so that therefore she be not of a worser flock.

Quivi pregava con le mani sporte
Federigo Novello, e quel da Pisa,
Che se parer lo buon Marzucco forte.

Vidi Cont' Orso, e l' anima divisa
Dal corpo suo per astio e per inveggià,
Come dicea, non per colpa commissa:
Pier dalla Broccia dico: e qui proveggia,
Mentr' è di qua, la donna di Brabante,
Si che però non sia di peggior greggia death at the hands of the Bostoli, or Bartoli.—Annegò. For this intransitive use of "annegare" and other words, see Corticelli, Lingua Tosca., bk. ii. ch. 3, and cf. the similar idiom in English.

The one point agreed by all the Commentators is that the son of Marzucco de' Scornigiani, a gentleman of Pisa, was murdered. There is a difference of opinion as to whether it was in revenge or forgiveness that he showed his fortitude, but the weight of evidence is in favour of the latter interpretation. The person here mentioned is the son.

There is even greater uncertainty as to Count Orso. See Philalethes's note.

Peter de la Brosse, surgeon and afterwards chamberlain to Philip III. of France. He was hung in 1276, on a charge of treasonable correspondence with the king of Castile. Another story says that Mary of Brabant, Philip's second wife, accused him of attempting her chastity, in revenge for his having suspected her of poisoning the king's eldest son Louis. Both charges may have been brought, the latter being not uncommon in the Middle Ages, whenever a wife wished to ruin a husband's favourite.
When I was free from all those shades, whose prayer was only that another pray, so that their sanctification may come quickly, I began: "Methinks thou tellest me, O my light, expressly in a certain passage, that prayer bends not decree of Heaven, and these folk pray only for that. Would then their hope be vain, or is thy saying not rightly manifest to me?" And he to me: "My writing is plain, and the hope of these fails not, if it is looked at well with sound judgement; since the high summit of justice is not vailed because the fire of love accomplishes in one moment that satisfaction which he owes who is lodged here; and in the case where I affirmed that point, a defect was not

Come libero fui da tutte quante
Quell' ombre, che pregar pur ch' altri preghi,
Si che s' avacci il lor divenir sante,
Io cominciai: E' par che tu mi nieghi,
O luce mia, espresso in alcun testo,
Che decreto del Cielo orazion pieghi:
E questa gente prega pur di questo.
Sarebbe dunque loro speme vana?
O non m' è il detto tuo ben manifesto?
Ed egli a me: La mia scrittura è piana,
E la speranza di costor non falla,
Se ben si guarda con la mente sana:
Chè cima di giudicio non s' avvalla,
Perchè fuoco d' amor compia in un punto
Ciò, che dee soddisfar chi qui s' astalla:
E là dov' io fermai cotesto punto,

Si stalla Gg. (altered from s'as.); W.

Æn. vi. 376.
amended by praying, because the prayer was disjoined from God. But in regard to so lofty a doubt, rest not thyself, until she tell it thee, who will be a light betwixt the truth and the understanding. I know not if thou comprehend: I speak of Beatrice; thou wilt see her above, upon the summit of this mount, smiling in bliss.” And I: “Master, go we with greater speed; for now I grow not wearied as before; and see how the slope begins now to cast its shadow.” “We will go forward with this daylight,” he answered, “as far as we shall yet

Non si ammendava, per pregar, difetto,
Perchè il prego da Dio era disgiunto.
Veramente a cosi alto sospetto
Non ti ferman, se quella nol ti dice,
Che lume fia tra il vero e l’ intelletto:
Non so se intendi: io dico di Beatrice:
Tu la vedrai di sopra, in su la vetta
Di questo monte, ridere felice. b
Ed io: Signore, andiamo a maggior fretta, c
Chè già non m’affatico come dianzi:
E vedi omai, che il poggio l’ombra getta.
Noi anderem con questo giorno innanzi,
Rispose, quanto più potremo omai:

b ridere e Cass. 2 W. rider e 1345; ridente e Ald. Land. Bi.
c Buon Duca and. Ald. Bi.

43 Veramente = Lat. verum, as in xxii. 28, and Conv. i. 2.
52 Omai. See i. 2. This shows how the original meaning passes into the other. “Henceforth the hill casts a shadow” is the same as “the hill has now begun to cast, or already casts.”
be able, but the fact is otherwise than thou supposest. Before thou art there on high, thou wilt see return him who already is being covered by the hillside, so that thou makest not his rays to break. But see there a soul which posted all alone is looking towards us; it will point out to us the quickest way.” We came to it. O Lombard soul, how wert thou standing haughty and disdainful! and in the movement of thine eyes dignified and tranquil. It was

Ma il fatto è d’altra forma che non stanzi.
Prima che sii lassù, tornar vedrai
Colui che già si cuopre della costa,
Si che i suoi raggi tu romper non fai.
Ma vedi là un’anima, che posta
Sola soletta verso noi riguarda:
Quella ne insegherà la via più tosta.

Vennimo a lei: o anima Lombarda,
Come ti stavi altera e disdegnosa,
E nel muover degli occhi onesta e tarda
Ella non ci diceva alcuna cosa:

54 Dante thinks that they will be able to travel faster when the sun is off them, and will reach the summit soon; but Virgil explains that they have farther to go than can be accomplished in one night’s journey. There is no question here of inability to go by night. As appears from vii. 50, Virgil is not yet himself aware that any such difficulty exists.

57 There is no other instance in Dante of rompere intrans., except in Conv. iv. 28, where it has the technical meaning of “to be wrecked.” At the same time there is still greater difficulty about understanding fai as puoi or even as a mere auxiliary verb. One is tempted to wonder whether fare ever got mixed up with Goth. fahan, Germ. fahen (fangen), whence fähig. W. gives a variant sai, but no authority for it.

63 Onesta e tarda. Cf. iii. 10, 11.
saying nothing to us, but was letting us go on, only looking in fashion of a lion when he reposes. Nevertheless, Virgil drew near to it, praying that it would show us the best ascent; and it answered not to his demand, but inquired of us about our country and our life. And the gentle leader began: “Mantua . . . .” And the shade that was all self-contained and lonely sprang toward him from the place where before it was standing, saying: “O Mantuan,

Ma lasciavane gir, solo guardando
A guisa di leon quando si posa.
Pur Virgilio si trasse a lei, pregando,
Che ne mostrasse la miglior salita:
E quella non rispose al suo dimando:
Ma di nostro paese e della vita
C’inchiese. E il dolce Duca incominciava, Mantova . . . E l’ombra tutta in sè romita,
Surse ver lui del luogo, ove pria stava, Dicendo, O Mantovano, io son Sordello

d sol riguard. Gg.

72 Tutta in se romita. The words are almost untranslatable, from their exceeding compression. Philalethes perhaps succeeds best with his “ganz in sich vertieft erst;” but this hardly gives the force of romita, “hermit.”

74 Sordello—soldier, statesman, and poet—was born early in the thirteenth century, and was living in 1266, as appears from a letter of Pope Clement IV. to Charles of Anjou, dated in that year. Dante mentions him, De Vulg. Eloq. i. 15; but only as an instance of a person who had abandoned his native dialect in writing and speaking. Villani does not mention him. The chief evidence for his having been podestà of Mantua seems to be his position here in company with men who were all rulers; on the other hand, these officers were almost, if not quite invariably, chosen from the citizens of another state than that which they ruled. All that is known with any certainty about Sordello may be found in Fauriel, vol. i. p. 504, sq.
I am Sordello of thy land." And the one embraced the other. Ah Italy! thou slave, hostel of woe, ship without pilot in so great a tempest, not lady of provinces, but brothel! This noble spirit was thus ready, only for the sweet sound of his country's [name], to make joyous greeting for his fellow-citizen here; and now in thee thy living men stay not without war, and one gnaws the other of those whom one wall enlocks and one moat. Search, wretch, thy sea-coasts all about the shores, and then look into the heart, if any part in thee enjoys peace. What Della tua terra. E l' un l' altro abbracciava.

Ahi serva Italia, di dolore ostello,
Nave senza nocchiero in gran tempesta,
Non donna di provincie, ma bordello;
Quell' anima gentil fu cosi presta,
Sol per lo dolce suon della sua terra, *
Di fare al cittadin suo quivi festa:
Ed ora in te non stanno senza guerra
Li vivi tuoi, e l' un l' altro si rode Di quei, che un muro ed una fossa serra.
Cerca, misera, intorno dalle prode
Le tue marine, e poi ti guarda in seno,
S' alcuna parte in te di pace gode.

* per quel Gg.

75 Observe that though Dante cannot embrace a shade, one shade can sometimes embrace another; though even this is not always allowed. See xxi. 135, 136.
77 In Conv. iv. 4, Dante works out at some length the image of ship and pilot as appropriate to the relations of the state and the emperor.
78 Cf. Isaiah xlvi. 5.
81 Festa. So in xxvi. 33.
boots it that Justinian should have put thy rein in order, if the saddle is empty? Without that were the shame less. Ah folk that ought to have been devout and to let Cæsar sit in the saddle, if ye understand well that which God ordains to you, look how that beast has become fell, through not being corrected with the spurs, since ye have placed your hands upon the headstall. O German Albert, who abandonest her that is become untamed and savage, and oughtest to have bestridden her saddlebows, may a

Che val, perché ti racconciasse il freno
Giustiniano, se la sella è vota?
Senz’ esso fora la vergogna meno.

Ahi gente, che dovresti esser devota,
E lasciar seder Cesare in la sella,
Se bene intendi ciò che Dio ti nota,
Guarda com’ esta fiera è fatta fella,
Per non esser corretta dagli spromi,
Poi che ponesti mano alla predella.

O Alberto Tedesco, che abbandoni
Costei ch’ è fatta indomita e selvaggia,
E dovresti inforcar li suoi arcioni:

97 Gente; the clergy.
93 “Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar’s.”
96 Predella (or as some MSS. read, bridella), “è quella parte della briglia che si tiene in mano” (Landino). “Quella parte della briglia che si gira alla guancia del cavallo presso il morso” (note in the Milan edition of Villani ix. 241). Though no doubt the same word as our bridle, it thus has not quite the same meaning. Lombardi takes it in the modern sense of “a footstool,” as if a mounting-block, which seems unnecessary and weak. For the whole comparison of Italy to a riderless horse, cf. Conv. iv. 9.
97 Albert I. of Hapsburg, emperor (but never crowned) from 1298–1308, in which year he was assassinated by his nephew. (Vill. viii. 94.) This took place almost within sight of the castle of Hapsburg.
just judgment fall from the stars on thy blood, and may it be strange and evident, such that thy successor may have fear of it; for ye have, thou and thy father, suffered—through covetousness being drawn away from hence—that the garden of the empire should lie desert. Come and see Montagues and Capulets, Monaldi and Filippeschi, thou careless man, those already grieving, these in suspicion.

Giusto giudizio dalle stelle caggia
Sovra il tuo sangue, e sia nuovo, ed aperto,
Tal che il tuo successor temenza n’aggia:\nChè avete tu e il tuo padre sofferto,
Per cupidigia di costà distretti,
Che il giardin dell’ imperio sia diserto.
Vieni a veder Montecchi e Cappelletti,
Monaldi e Filippeschi, uom senza cura,
Color già tristi, e costor con sospetti.

The question here is, as Philalethes points out, whether these are to be regarded as pairs of opposing families, or as all examples of oppressed Ghibellines. The known enmity of the first-named pair rather countenance the former view, and with regard to the Monaldi and Filippeschi, who were noble families of Orvieto, Land. and Vell. tell us that they were “due contrarie famiglie.” (Vellutello, it may be remarked, takes line 108 as referring to the Monaldi and Filippeschi only; the former said at being oppressed by the latter, and these fearing vengeance. But most commentators prefer the more obvious interpretation.) Pietro di Dante gives similar evidence. Bianchi and Blanc call them all four Ghibelline families. Philalethes “does not know to which party the Monaldeschi belonged;” but quotes some evidence pointing not very distinctly to the supposition that the Filippeschi were Guelfs. Neither of the learned German commentators seems to have referred to Villani, who says (ix. 40), that in 1312 on the occasion of the emperor Henry VII.'s passage through Orvieto, “i Filippeschi d'Orbivieto, col loro seguito di Ghibellini cominciarono battaglia nella città contro a Monaldeschi e gli altri Guelfi d'Orbivieto, per dare la terra allo imperadore.” This appears conclusive.
Come, cruel, come, and behold the oppression of thy nobles, and heal their disorders, and thou wilt see in what wise Santafiore is at ease. Come to see thy Rome who weeps, widowed, alone, and day and night cries out: "My Cæsar, wherefore art thou not my companion?" Come to see how much the folk love one another; and if no pity for us moves thee, come to shame thyself for thy own renown. And if it is allowed me, O highest Jove, who upon earth wast crucified for us, are thy just eyes turned other-whither? Or is it preparation, which in the

Vien, crudel, vieni, e vedi la pressura 110
De' tuoi gentili, e cura lor magagne,
E vedrai Santafior, com' è sicura.
Vieni a veder la tua Roma che piagne,
Vedova, sola, e dì e notte chiama,
Cesare mio, perchè non m' accompagna?
Vieni a veder la gentile, quanto s' ama:
E se nulla di noi pietà ti muove,
A vergognar ti vien della tua fama.
E se l'icto m' è, o sommo Giove,
Che fosti in terra per noi crocifisso,
Son li giusti occhi tuoi rivolti altrove?
O è preparazion, che nell' abisso 120

113 Santafiore, a county in the territory of Siena, formerly an imperial fief, now in the hands of the Guelfs of the city. Villani mentions the counts more than once among the leading Ghibellines of Tuscany. There is another reading, come si cura; but the irony of com' è sicura is quite in Dante's manner, cf. line 115.
118 Philalethes suggests, what is probably true, that Dante imagined Jehovah and Jove to be the same word. Otherwise he would hardly have used the name of one of the "dei falsi e bugiardi" in such a collocation.
abyss of thy counsel thou makest for some good, wholly cut off from our comprehension? For the lands of Italy are all full of tyrants, and every churl that comes partisans it becomes a Marcellus. My Florence, well mayst thou be satisfied with this digression that touches thee not, thanks to thy people that is so full of reason. Many have justice in heart, but it shoots forth late, through not coming to the bow without counsel; but thy people

Del tuo consiglio fai per alcun bene;
In tutto dall'accorger nostro ascesso?
Chè le terre d'Italia tutte piene
Son di tiranni; ed un Marcel diventa↑
Ogni villan che parteggiando viene?
Fiorenza mia, ben puoi esser contenta
Di questa digression che non ti tocca
Mercè del popol tuo, che sì argomenta.
Molti han giustizia in cuor, ma tardi scocca,
Per non venir senza consiglio all'arco:
Ma il popol tuo l'ha in sommo della bocca.

↑ un Metel Gg.

125 A Marcellus was consul in each of the years A.U.C. 703, 704, and 705, and they were all opponents of Cæsar. The one more particularly in Dante's mind was probably the first of these, M. Claudius Marcellus, the Marcellus loquax of Lucan, who was the most bitter in his opposition. See the letters of Cælius to Cicero during 703 and 704. It is curious, as showing how the conception of the empire was changed, to observe that Dante likens the man of low birth who gets a reputation by attacking the nobles, to the very men who defended the nobles in former times against the democratic party and Cæsar. The reading is explained by Metel ix. 138.

127 Landino, Blanc, Fraticelli read s'argomenta "takes thought," as in xxv. 15. I think the sì is wanted; and there is probably a play on two meanings of the word, which the English "reason" partly conveys.
has it on the outermost lips. Many refuse the burden of the commonweal; but thy people answers eagerly without call, and cries: "I charge myself." Now make thyself happy, for thou hast surely wherefore: thou who art rich, at peace, thou [filled] with wisdom. If I say true, the result conceals it not. Athens and Lacedæmon, that framed the ancient laws, and were so civilised, made in regard to living well a small mark compared with thee, who makest such subtle provisions, that to mid-November reaches not what thou in October dost spin. How often in

Molti rifiutan lo comune incarco:
Ma il popol tuo sollecito risponde
Senza chiamare, e grida: Io mi sobbarco.
Or ti fa lieta, chè tu hai ben onde:
Tu ricca, tu con pace, tu con senno.
S' io dico ver, l' effetto nol nasconde.
Atene e Lacedemona, che fenno
Le antiche leggi, e furon si civili,
Fecero al viver bene un picciol cenno,
Verso di te, che fai tanto sottili
Proveddimenti, ch' a mezzo Novembre
Non giunge quel che tu d' Ottobre fili.
Quante volte del tempo, che rimembre,

135 Sobbarco = to gird up the garments for work (Bianchi).
139,140 Villani (xii. 19) quotes these lines as appropriate to the state of the city in 1343; and ib. 97 the three following with reference to the change of coinage in 1347. Philaletes gives, in a note, a short account of the changes in Florentine parties during the thirteenth century, and adds, with some naiveté, "Freilich, was ist dieses, gegen die Umwälzungen und Verfassungsveränderungen von 1789-1851?" No better justification of Dante's words is needed than may be found in Villani passim, and Macchiavelli Hist. Flor. bk. ii.
the time that thou rememberest hast thou changed law, money, and offices, and customs, and renewed thy members? And if thou rightly call thyself to mind, and see light, thou wilt behold thyself in semblance of that sick one, who cannot find repose upon the feathers, but with turning over keeps off her pain.

Legge, moneta, e ufici, e costume
Hai tu mutato, e rinnovato membre?
E se ben ti ricorda, e vedi lume,
Vedrai te simigliante a quella inferma,
Che non può trovar posa in su le piume,
Ma con dar volta suo dolore scherma.

147 Mutato. The rule of the agreement of participles is not invariable in Dante.
CANTO VII.

ARGUMENT.

Virgil makes himself and his condition known to Sordello, who leads them to a little valley on the mountain-side, where they find many kings and princes such as had, through the cares of this world, put off repentance. Among them are Rudolf the Emperor, Charles of France, king of Apulia, Peter king of Aragon, Henry king of England, and Philip king of France.

After that the noble and joyful greetings had been repeated thrice and four times, Sordello drew back, and said: "Who are ye?" "Before that the souls worthy to ascend to God were turned toward this mount were my bones buried by Octavian. I am Virgil, and for no other crime did I lose Heaven than for not having faith," thus answered then my Leader. As he who sees on a sudden a

Posciachè l' accoglienze oneste e liete
Furo iterate tre e quattro volte,
Sordel si trasse, e disse: Voi chi siete?
Prima ch' a questo monte fosser volte
L' anime degne di salire a Dio,
Fur l' ossa mie per Ottaviano sepolti:
Io son Virgilio: e per null' altro rio
Lo Ciel perdei, che per non aver fè;
Così rispose allora il Duca mio.
thing before him, whereof he so wonders that he believes and doubts, saying: "It is, it is not;" such appeared he, and then he veiled his brows, and humbly turned again toward the other, and embraced him where the inferior takes hold. "O glory of the Latins," said he, "through whom our tongue showed what its power was; O eternal treasure of the place whence I sprang, what desert or what favour shows thee to me? If I am worthy to hear thy words, tell me if thou comest from Hell, and from what ward." "Through all the circles of the realm of woe,"

Qual è colui, che cosa innanzi a sè
Subita vede, ond' ei si maraviglia,
Che crede e no, dicendo: Ell' è, non è,
Tal parve quegli: e poi chinò le ciglia,
Ed umilmente ritornò ver lui,
Ed abbracciollo ove il minor s' appiglia.\(^a\)

O gloria de' Latin, disse, per cui
Mostrò ciò che potea la lingua nostra:
O pregio eterno del loco, ond' io fui:
Qual merito, o qual grazia mi ti mostra?
S' io son d' udir le tue parole degno,
Dimmi se vien d' Inferno, e di qual chiostra?
Per tutti i cerchi del dolente regno,

\(^a\) abbracciollo ove Gg. . . . cio là dove Cass. . . . 'l nutrir Gg. (marg.) Ald. etc.

\(^{17}\) I venture to read ond' ei si maraviglia, instead of the usual si, as it seems to make the sense run more smoothly.

\(^{25}\) Ove 'l minor s' appiglia. Usually taken to mean the knees; but Land. "sotto le braccia." Others, ove 'l nutrir, i.e. the navel, hence, the waist.

\(^{21}\) Chiostra; so Inf. xxix. 40.
he answered him, "am I come to this side; a power from Heaven moved me, and with it I come. Not for doing, but for not doing, have I lost the sight of the Sun on high whom thou desirest, and who was too late known by me. There is a place below, not sad with torments, but with gloom only, where the lamentations sound not as wails but are sighs. There stay I, with the little innocents bitten by the teeth of death, before that they were freed from human sin. There stay I, with those who were not clad with the three holy virtues, but faultless knew the others, and followed every one. But if thou knowest and canst, give us some

Rispose lui, son io di qua venuto:
Virtù del Ciel mi mosse, e con lei vegno.
Non per far, ma per non fare ho perduto
Di veder l' alto Sol che tu disiri,
E che fu tardi da me conosciuto.
Luogo è laggiù non tristo da martiri,
Ma di tenebre solo, ove i lamenti
Non suonan come guai, ma son sospiri.

Quivi sto io co' parvoli innocenti,
Dai denti morsi della morte, avante
Che fosser dell' umana colpa esenti.
Quivi sto io con quei che le tre sante
Virtù non si vestiro, e senza vizio
Conobber l'altre, e seguir tutte quante.

Ma se tu sai e puoi, alcun indizio

34 The theological virtues of faith, hope, and charity; l'altra in line 36 being the moral virtues of temperance, justice, fortitude, and prudence. Notice the Latin construction of virtù si vestiro.
direction, whereby we may come more quickly there where Purgatory has its right beginning." He answered: "A certain place is not assigned to us: it is permitted me to go upward and around: as far as I can go, I put myself at thy side as guide. But see already how the day declines, and to go upward in the night is not possible; wherefore it is good to think about a fair sojourn. There are spirits to the right here, apart, if thou give me thy consent, I will lead thee to them, and not without delight will they become known to thee." "How is that?" was the reply; "he who would mount at night, would he be hindered of any? or

Dà noi, perchè venir possiam più tosto
Là dove il Purgatorio ha dritto inizio.
Rispose: Luogo certo non c'è posto:
Licito m'è andar suso ed intorno:
Per quanto ir posso, a guida mi t' accosto:
Ma vidi già come dichina il giorno,
Ed andar su di notte non si puote:
Però è buon pensar di bel soggiorno.

Anime sono a destra qua rimote:
Se 'l mi consenti, io ti merrò ad esse, c
E non senza diletto ti fien note.
Com'è ciò? fu risposto: chi volesse
Salir di notte, fora egli impedito

D' altrui? ovver sarà che non potesse? d c Se mi Cass. Gg. Ald. Land. menerotti Bi.

---

d o non sarria Cass. Ald. (1) Lomb.; o pur sarria Ald. (2); o pur sarria Land.

40 Cf. Æn. vi. 673.
51 Ovver sarria. Philalethes and Blanc prefer the reading, o non sarria = saliria. Landino's reading seems to give, on the whole, the best sense, but lacks MS. authority. In o pur sarria, in the Aldine of 1515, the second r is probably a misprint.
would it be that he could not?" And the good Sordello rubbed his finger on the ground, saying: "See, only this line thou wouldst not pass after the sun was set; not, however, that anything, other than the gloom of night, would give hindrance to going upward; that with want of power hampers the will. Well were it possible with it to turn downward, and pass over the hillside wandering about, while that the horizon holds the day closed." Then my Master, as though wondering, said: "Lead us then to the place where thou sayest that one may have delight in tarrying."

A little distance had we gone away from that place,

E il buon Sordello in terra fregò il dito,
    Dicendo: Vedi, sola questa riga
Non varcheresti dopo il Sol partito:
Non però che altra cosa desse briga,
    Che la notturna tenebra, ad ir suso:
Quella col non poter la voglia intriga.
Ben si poria con lei tornare in giuso,
    E passeggiar la costa intorno errando,
Mentre che l' orizzonte il di tien chiuso.

Allora il mio Signor, quasi ammirando,
Menane, disse, dunque la 've dici
Che aver si può diletto dimorando.
Poco allungati c' eravam di lici,

54 It may be remarked that though the shades are too unsubstantial to be grasped by mortal arms, yet Sordello can mark the ground with his finger.
57 Cf. v. 66. The meaning of the passage generally is, as Philalethes points out, that without God's grace man cannot make any progress towards good, while his own power suffices to enable him to fall into error.
when I was aware that the mountain was cut away in fashion as the valleys cut them away here. "Yonder," said that shade, "will we take our way, where the hillside makes of itself a bosom, and there will we await the new day." Part steep, part level, was a winding path, which led us into a side of the hollow, there where the rim dies more than half away. Gold and fine silver, cochineal and white lead, the Indian wood lucid and serene, fresh emerald in

Quand’ io m’ accorsi che il monte era scemo,
A guisa che i vallon li sceman quici.\(^6\)
Colà, disse quell’ ombra, n’ anderemo,
Dove la costa face di sè grembo,
E qui vi il nuovo giorno attenderemo.
Tra erto e piano era un sentiere sghembo,
Che ne condusse in fianco della lacca,
Là ove più che a mezzo muore il lembo.
Oro ed argento fino, cocco e bicca,
Indico legno lucido e sereno.\(^3\)

65 Era scemo. "Cioè aveva concavità." Buti.
69, 69 While Sordello speaks of the place as to be gone to, it is colà; when he is saying what is to be done there, it is qui vi.
70 Tra erto e piano. I am inclined to think with Landino and Bianchi that these words refer not to the position but to the nature of the path. Cf. such expressions as "centocinquanta migliaia di persone tra uccisono e menarono;" "avea armate centoventi tra galee e altri legni." Villani. Cf. xxiv. 13.
72 Muore. It will be noticed that Dante generally uses the present tense in describing the physical features of Purgatory; a natural touch which perhaps more than anything else gives an effect of reality to his descriptions.
the hour when it flakes, each would be vanquished in colour by the grass and by the flowers placed within that lap, as by its greater is vanquished the less. Nature had not only painted there, but with the sweetness of a thousand odours made there one, unknown, and undistinguished. There I saw souls sit singing Salve Regina on the green and on the

Fresco smeraldo in 'l ora che si fiacca,
Dall' erba e dalli fior dentro a quel seno
Posti, ciascun saria di color vinto,
Come dal suo maggiore è vinto il meno.
Non avea pur natura ivi dipinto,
Ma di soavità di mille odori
Vi facea un incognito e indistinto.
Salve, regina, in sul verde e in sui fiori

73, 74, 75 It will be noticed that these represent the colours with which the illuminators of books would chiefly work. There is much difficulty about indice legno. A blue is clearly wanted, but it seems doubtful whether the words can mean indigo. Many commentators understand ebony, and Blanc compares Georg. ii. 116; but the epithets do not seem appropriate; nor is a black substance in place here. It may be observed that lucidi sereni is used by Boccaccio more than once (i. 10, v. 6) in the sense of “clear skies,” especially at night. Possibly this meaning, which is also found in Latin (e.g. Georg. i. 393), may have been sufficiently common to allow Dante to denote by it “the blue of heaven,” in which case the indicio legno might still be indigo, and the general idea would be that metals, pigments, animal vegetable or mineral, precious stones, and even the colour of the sky itself, were inadequate to represent the brilliant colouring of this “Valley of Princes.” It is not necessary to hold with Mr. Ruskin that smeraldo is “emerald green;” the uncut (fresco) emerald is not bright, and it is not until the stone is split or flaked that the full colour is seen. [Since this note was written I find that Mr. Parsons, an American translator, has taken the same view as to lucidi sereni.]

81 Indistinto: “not to be separated into its component parts.”
82 Salve Regina is one of the Compline Antiphons.
flowers, who by reason of the valley did not appear outside. “Before the little sun that remains sets,” began the Mantuan, who had brought us, “desire not that I should guide you among them. From this ledge better will you observe the acts and countenances of each and all, than when received among them in the dell below. He who sits highest, and has the semblance of having neglected that which he ought to have done, and who moves not his mouth to the others’ chants, was Rudolf the emperor, who had the power to heal the wounds which have slain Italy, so that too late she

Quindi seder cantando anime vidi,
Che per la valle non parean di fuori.
Prima che il poco Sole omai s’annidi,
Cominciò il Mantovan che ci avea voltì,
Tra color non vogliate ch’io vi guidi.
Da questo balzo meglio gli atti e i volti
Conoscerete voi di tutti quanti,
Che nella lama giù tra essi accoltì.

Colui che più sied’ alto, ed ha sembianti
D’aver negletto ciò che far dovea,
E chè non muove bocca agli altrui canti,
Ridolfo Imperador fu, che potea
Sanar le piaghe ch’han Italia morta,
Sì che tardi per altri si ricrea.

83 The shades of kings and other rulers who had deferred their repentance, owing to the pressure of temporal interests.
94, 95 “Se avesse voluto passare in Italia senza contrasto n’era signore.” Villani vii. 55.
96 Altri is rare in oblique cases; so quei in iii. 120. Vid. Diez ii.
74, 75, 82. He is not quite consistent with himself. Henry VII.
of Luxemburg is the person meant.
is seeking cure through another. The other, who in visage is comforting him, ruled the land where the water takes its rise that Moldau into Elbe, and Elbe bears away into sea. Ottocar had he to name, and in his swaddling-clothes was better far than Wenceslas his son a bearded man, whom luxury and ease feed. And that small-nosed man, who appears close in counsel with him who has so benign a mien, died flying and deflowering the lily; look there, how he beats his

L' altro, che nella vista lui conforta,
Resse la terra dove l' acqua nasce,
Che Molta in Albia, e Albia in mar ne porta.\(^8\)
Ottacherò ebbe nome, e nelle fasce
Fu meglio assai, che Vincislao suo figlio
Barbuto, cui lussuria ed ozio pasce.
E quel nasetto, che stretto a consiglio\(^h\)
Par con colui c' ha sì benigno aspetto,
Mori fuggendo e disfiorando il giglio:
Guardate là, come si batte il petto.

\(^8\) muta Gg. monta 3 Ald. Land.
\(^h\) nasuto W. [but he translates "stumpf Benas'te."]

97 Ottocar, king of Bohemia, killed in battle against Rudolf 1277 (Vill. vii. 55). \(nella\) \(vista\), etc. Cf. i. 79.
101 Wenceslas died in 1310 (Vill. ix. 1); cf. Par. xix. 125. His daughter married John, son of the emperor Henry VII., who became king of Bohemia and was killed at Crecy.
103 Philip III. of France died at Perpignan, Oct. 6, 1285, after a disastrous retreat from Gerona. He had captured the town, but his fleet was immediately afterwards destroyed in the Gulf of Rosas, by Roger di Loria, admiral of Peter of Aragon, and his supplies being cut off, he was compelled to retire. Witte says that his short nose may still be observed in his effigy at Narbonne.
104 Colni. Henry III. of Navarre, whose daughter married Philip the Fair, son of Philip III., and the \(mal\) \(di\) \(Francia\). Cf. i. 109.
breast. The other ye see how he has made of his palm, sighing, a bed for his cheek. Father and father-in-law are they of the woe of France; they know his corrupt and filthy life, and hence comes the grief that so pierces them. He who appears so large-limbed, and keeps time in his chanting with him of the manly nose, wore girt on him the cord of every worth. And if the youth who sits behind

L’ altro vedete c’ ha fatto alla guancia
Della sua palma, sospirando, letto.
Padre e suocero son del mal di Francia:
Sanno la vita sua viziata e lorda,
E quindi viene il duol, che sì gli lancia.
Quel che par sì membruto, e che s’ accorda
Cantando con colui dal maschio naso,
D’ ogni valor portò cinta la corda:
E se Re dopo lui fosse rimaso

112 Peter III., king of Aragon, and in the later years of his life—after the expulsion of the French at the “Sicilian Vespers”—of Sicily, and son-in-law to Manfred, died Nov. 8, 1285, of a wound received in a skirmish with the French before Gerona. Villani (vii. 103) says of him: “Fu valente signore e pro’ in arme e bene avventuroso e savio come nullo re che regnasse al suo tempo.” This notwithstanding the rather discreditable trick played on Charles of Anjou, which practically gave him Sicily.

113 Charles of Anjou, brother of St. Louis, king of Sicily and Apulia, was the greatest champion whom the Guelf cause ever had. By his defeats of Manfred (1265) and Conradin (1269), the power of the Hohenstaufens was brought to an end in Italy. He died Jan. 7, 1284. The first ninety-five chapters of Villani’s seventh book are occupied almost entirely with his doings. His character and person are sketched in the first chapter, and the historian does not omit to mention his large nose. He would seem to have been a man of high principles, and sincerely religious, but lacking the sweetness of temper which, except when a heretic was in question, distinguished his brother.
him had remained king after him, well had the worth gone from vessel to vessel; which cannot be said of the other heirs. James and Frederick have the kingdoms: of the better heritage no one possesses aught. Seldom rises human goodness through the branches; and this wills He who gives it in order that from him it may be claimed. To the

Lo giovinetto che retro a lui siede,
Bene andava il valor di vaso in vaso:
Che non si puote dir dell' altre rede:
Jacom e Federico hanno i reami:
Del retaggio miglior nessun possiede.

Rade volte risurge per li rami
L' umana probitate: e questo vuole
Quei che la dà, perché da lui si chiami.
Anco al nasuto vanno mie parole
Non men, ch' all' altro, Pier, che con lui canta:

216 Probably Alfonso, eldest son of Peter, who succeeded his father in the kingdom of Aragon, but died after a reign of a few years only.
218 Notice rede fem. This is not unusual in the Romance languages. Cf. guida, and Sp. guía, centinela. So Fr. sentinelle, bête, even when a male is referred to.
219 James, second son of Peter, succeeded at his father's death to the throne of Sicily. On his elder brother's death, in 1295, he went to Aragon, leaving Sicily under the control of his brother Frederick, thus defrauding Charles II. (of Apulia), to whom he had promised to resign it. Later, James and Charles joined against Frederick, and defeated him in a sea-fight, July 4, 1299; but he continued to hold Sicily, and showed himself in 1302 more than a match for Charles of Valois. Dante apostrophises Charles of Apulia and Frederick in Conv. iv. 6; and alludes to them with some bitterness, Par. xx. 61. But see iii. 1-16.
217 Cf. Odyssey, B. 276.
223 Others take chiami as = called or named. The point is, that whereas physical qualities are received from the parent, those of the mind or soul come directly from God. Cf. xxv. 70 sqq.
large-nosed man come my words, not less than to the other, Peter, who sings with him; whence Apulia and Provence already grieve. The plant is so much worse than its seed, as, more than Beatrice and Margaret, Constance still boasts Onde Puglia e Provenza già si duole.

Tant' è del seme suo miglior la pianta,
Quanto più che Beatrice e Margherita,
Gostanza di marito ancor si vanta
Vedete il Re della semplice vita
Seder là solo, Arrigo d' Inghilterra.

126 Charles II., son of Charles of Anjou (il Nasuto), king of Apulia and count of Provence, died May 3, 1308. "Uno de' [? più] larghi e graziosi signori che al suo tempo vivesse, e fu chiamato il secondo Alessandro per la cortesia; ma per altre virtù fu di poco valore," says Villani viii. 108; and cf. Par. xix. 127.

128, 129 Beatrice and Margaret, daughters of Raimond Berenger, count of Provence, were wives to Charles of Anjou and Louis IX.; and Constance, daughter of Manfred, was, as has been said, wife to Peter. It may seem strange that Dante should so depreciate St. Louis; but probably his dislike to the royal house of France extended itself to its head. At any rate, it is curious that that great king is nowhere mentioned throughout the poem. The meaning is, Charles's son is as much inferior to him as Charles and Louis to Peter. Another view is that the Margaret referred to is Charles's second wife, daughter of Eudes, duke of Burgundy. Note in Gg. says: "Istæ duxer erant nurus dominæ Constantiæ uxorès d. Jacopi et d. Frederici"; and Land. and Vell. say that Beatrice was wife to Frederick, Margaret to James. This, however, does not appear to agree with the facts; as the wives of those princes (daughters of Charles II.) were named respectively Eleanor and Blanche.

131 Henry III. He sits apart probably as having no territorial connection with the empire. Villani (v. 4) sums up his character shortly: "Fu semplice uomo e di buona fe, e di poco valore;" and elsewhere: "Fu uomo di semplice vita." He agrees also with Dante in his opinion of Edward I.: "Il buono è Adoardo, uno de' più valorosi signori al suo tempo" (viii. 90).
of her husband. See the king of the simple life sitting there alone—Henry of England; he has in his branches better issue. He who lower down sits on the ground among those, looking upward, is William the marquis, for whose sake Alessandria and her war makes Monferrato and the Canavese weep.

Questi ha ne' rami suoi migliore uscita.\(^1\)
Quel che più basso tra costor s' atterra,
Guardando insuso, è Guglielmo Marchese,
Per cui Alessandria e la sua guerra
Fa pianger Monferrato e il Canavese.

\(^1\) _reami Cass. Gg. 134._

\(^{134}\) William, marquis of Montferrat, and the Canavese (the district, according to Philalethes, between the two Doras and the Po), was captured and imprisoned by the men of Alessandria. He died 1292, and his sons, to avenge him, went to war. Dante commemorates him (Conv. iv. 6) among men renowned for generosity.
CANTO VIII.

ARGUMENT.

First sunset. The souls pray together, and two angels come to guard them. The poets descend among them, and Dante meets Nino de' Visconti and Conrad Malaspina. A serpent comes, and is put to flight by the angels. Then Dante and his friends converse till far into the night.

It was already the hour which brings desire upon seafarers, and makes tender their heart, the day that they have said farewell to their sweet friends; and which pricks the new pilgrim with love, if he hears a bell from afar, which seems to mourn the day that is dying; when I began to render vain my hearing, and to gaze on one of the souls

Era già l' ora che volge il disio
   Ai naviganti, e intenerisce il cuore
   Lo di ch' han detto ai dolci amici addio:
E che lo nuovo peregrin d' amore
   Punge, se ode squilla di lontano,
   Che paia il giorno pianger che si muore,
Quand' io incominciai a render vano
   L' udire, ed a mirare una dell' alme

5 Se ode. For the hiatus, cf. iv. 2, Par. xxvi. 34.
7 I.e. I listened no more to Sordello.
which, risen up, was with its hand beseeching attention. It joined and lifted both its palms, fixing its eyes toward the East, as it had said to God: "Aught else I heed not."

Te lucis ante so devoutly issued from its mouth, and with such sweet notes, that it made me issue from my own thought. And the others then sweetly and devoutly followed it throughout the entire hymn, having their eyes on the supernal wheels. Sharpen here, reader, well thy eyes to the truth, for the veil is now, surely, full fine enough for the passing within to be easy.

Surta, che l' ascoltar chiedea con mano.
Ella giunse e levò ambo le palme,
Ficando gli occhi verso l' oriente,
Come dicesse a Dio: D' altro non calme.
Te lucis ante si divotamente
Le usci di bocca, e con sì dolci note,
Che fece me a me uscir di mente:
E l' altre poi dolcemente e divote
Seguitar lei per tutto l' inno intero,
Avendo gli occhi alle superne ruote.
Aguzza qui, Lettor, ben gli occhi al vero;
Che il velo è ora ben tanto sottile,
Certo, che il trapassar dentro è leggiero.

32 Non calme = non mi cale; so xxx. 135.
33 The famous Compline hymn. "Te lucis ante terminum, Rerum Creator, poscimus, Ut pro tua clementia Sis præsul et custodia."
35 Made me forget everything else. Cf. again Eth. Nic. x. 5 (quoted in note to iv. 1-12).
39, 41 The meaning of these lines has been much discussed. There can be little doubt however that the simplest interpretation is also the right one, viz.: "Here, if anywhere, is the point at which the allegorical sense may be comprehended." At the same time it must be said that I saw that noble army silently thereafter gaze upward, as though awaiting, pale and humble; and I saw issue from on high, and descend downward, two angels with two flaming swords, shortened and deprived of their points. Green, as leaflets but just born, they were in raiment, which they drew after them smitten and blown about by their green wings. The one came to a halt a little above us, and the other descended upon the opposite bank, so that the folk was held in the midst. Well discerned I in them their fair heads; but in their faces the eye lost itself, as

Io vidi quello esercito gentile
Tacito poscia riguardare in sue,
Quasi aspettando pallido ed umile:
E vidi uscir dell' alto, e scender giue
Due Angeli con due spade affocate,
Tronche e private delle punte sue.
Verdi come fogliette pur mo nate
Erano in veste, che da verdi penne
Percosse traean dietro e ventilate.
L' un poco sovra noi a star si venne,
E l' altro scese in l' opposita sponda,
Si che la gente in mezzo si contenne.
Ben discerneva in lor la testa bionda:
Ma nelle facce l' occhio si smarria, none of the explanations is very satisfactory. Perhaps the key is to be found in the fact that the angels are clad in green. In the parallel passage, Inf. ix. 37-63, it may be observed that the Furies, by a kind of infernal parody, are "girt with greenest snakes." As they summon Medusa, or Despair, to turn the gazer into stone, so here we have our attention called to the Hope which animates the souls of the righteous.

a faculty which is confounded by excess. "Both come from the bosom of Mary," said Sordello, "for guard of the valley, by reason of the serpent which will straightway come." Whence I, who knew not by what path, turned me around, and straitly placed myself, all chilled, beside the trusted shoulders. And Sordello again: "Now let us go down at once among the mighty shades, and we will speak to them; well-pleasing will it be to them to see you."

Only three steps I think that I descended, and I was below, and saw one who was gazing only at me, as though he wished to know me. By this it was a time when the air was growing black, yet not so much but that between his

Come virtù che a troppo si confonda.
Ambo vegnon del grembo di Maria,
Disse Sordello, a guardia della valle,
Per lo serpente che verrà via via.
Ond’ io che non sapeva per qual calle,
Mi volsi intorno, e stretto m’ accostai
Tutto gelato alle fidate spalle.
E Sordello anche: Ora avvalliamo omai
Tra le grandi ombre, e parleremo ad esse:
Grazioso sia lor vedervi assai.
Solo tre passi credo ch’ io scendesse,
E fui di sotto, e vidi un che mirava
Pur me, come conoscere mi volessi.
Tempo era già, che l’ aer s’ annerava, eyes and mine it let grow clear that which till then it hid. Towards me he moved, and I moved towards him: noble judge Nino, how much it pleased me when I saw that thou wast not among the damned! No fair salute was silent between us; then he asked: "How long is it since thou hast come to the foot of the mount by the distant waters?" "Oh," said I to him, "by way of the regions of woe I came this morning, and I am in my first life, albeit that by so going I am seeking to gain the second." And

Ma non sì, che tra gli occhi suoi i miei
Non dichiarasse ciò che prià serrava.
Ver me si fece, ed io ver lui mi fei:
Giudice Nin gentil, quanto mi piacque,
Quando ti vidi non esser tra i rei!
Nullo bel salutar tra noi si tacque:
Poi dimandò: Quant'è, che tu venisti
Appiè del monte per le lontane acque?
O, diss'io lui, per entro i luoghi tristi
Venni stamane, e sono in prima vita,
Ancor che l'altra sì andando acquisti.
E come fu la mia riposta udita, as my answer was heard, Sordello and he drew themselves backward, as folk bewildered of a sudden. The one turned round to Virgil, and the other to one who was sitting there, crying: “Up, Conrad, come to see what God through His grace has willed.” Then, turning to me: “By this singular favour, which thou owest to Him who so hides His own first wherefore that there is no fathoming it, when thou shalt be beyond the broad waters’say to my Joan that she cry there for me where answer to the innocent is given. I think that her mother loves me not any more, since she has changed the white wimple, which it behoves

Sordello ed egli indietro si raccolse,
Come gente di subito smarrita.
L’ uno a Virgilio, e l’ altro ad un si voltse,
Che sedea li, gridando: Su Cúrrado,
Vieni a veder che Dio per grazia voltse.
Poi volto a me: Per quel singular grado,
Che tu dei a colui, che sì nasconde
Lo suo primo perché, che non gli è guado,
Quando sarai di là dalle larghe onde,
Di’ a Giovanna mia, che per me chiami
Là dove agli innocenti si risponde.
Non credo che la sua madre più m’ ami,
Poscia che trasmutò le bianche bende,

62 As Blanc points out, vi. 57 explains why Sordello has not till now known that Dante is alive.
64 Si voltse. See note to iv. 100.
69 Guado; literally, “it has no shallow.”
73 Nino’s wife was an Este. After his death she married Galeazzo Visconti of Milan.
74 Phialaethes quotes Boccaccio to show that black clothes and white headgear were then, as now, the mark of widowhood.
that she poor soul must long for yet again. Through her easily enough one may understand how long a flame of love lasts in a woman, if eye or touch often rekindle it not. The viper which the Milanese bears will not make her so fair a sepulture, as the cock of Gallura would have made.” Thus he spoke, marked in his aspect with the stamp of that upright zeal which burns, in due measure, in his heart.

My eyes were going eagerly to the heaven only, even there where the stars are slower, as a wheel where it is nearer

Le quai convien che misera ancor brami.
Per lei assai di lieve si comprende
Quanto in femmina fuoco d’amor dura,
Se l’occhio o il tatto spesso nol raccende.
Non le farà sì bella sepolture
La vipera che il Melanese accampa,\textsuperscript{a}
Com’ avria fatto il gallo di Gallura.
Così dicea, segnato della stampa
Nel suo aspetto di quel dritto zelo,
Che misuratamente in cuore avvampa.
Gli occhi miei ghiotti andavan pure al cielo,
Pur là dove le stelle son più tarde,

\textsuperscript{a} che i Melanesi Gg. Land. 14 W.; che Menalesi Cass.

\textsuperscript{80} I have followed Bianchi and Fraticelli in reading “che il Melanese accampa.” Blanc “regards as preferable in all respects” the older “che i Melanesi acc,” “which sets the Milanese in battle-array;” or, as Philalethes translates “druniter Mailands Volk sich lager.” But surely this is introducing an uncalled-for idea, and moreover, “il Melanese” is exactly the term by which a Visconti of Pisa would designate one of the same name (if not the same stock) at Milan. \textit{Accampa} “bears on the field of his escutcheon.” See Dict. Crusc. for \textit{campo} = “field” (heraldic).
to the axle. And my leader: "Son, at what gazest thou on high?" And I to him: "At those three torches, where-with the whole pole on this side burns." And he to me: "The four clear stars which thou sawest this morning are low on that side, and these are risen where those were." As he was beginning to speak, Sordello drew him to himself, saying: "See there our adversary," and pointed his finger that he might look that way. On that side when Sì come ruota più presso allo stelo.

E il Duca mio: Figliuol, che lassù guarde?
   Ed io a lui: A quelle tre facelle,
   Di che il polo di qua tutto quanto arde.  90
Ed egli a me: Le quattro chiare stelle,
   Che vedevi staman, son di là basse,
   E queste son salite ov' eran quelle.
Com' ei parlava, e Sordello a sè 'l trasse, b
   Dicendo: Vedi là il nostro avversaro,
   E drizzò il dito, perchè in là guatasse.
Da quella parte, onde non ha riparo

b Com' io parl. W.

89 Whether Dante had really any three stars in his mind, and if so, what they were, is a favourite subject of discussion among commentators. The most commonly-selected are α Eridani (Achernar), α Argus (Canopus), and α Doradus. An objection to this is that these are too near the Cross to be high when that is set; nor are they very near the pole. Others suggest Canopus and the Magellanic Clouds. But these speculations are not of much use. What is certain is that the four seen in the morning (i. 23) denote the cardinal or active virtues, and these the theological or contemplative. See xxxi. 106. It must be observed that all the seven are near the pole. The seven all together form the "settentrion del primo cielo," xxx. 1.
the little valley has no barrier was a snake; perchance such as gave to Eve the bitter food. Through the grass and flowers came the evil reptile, turning now and again its head towards its back, and licking, like a beast which sleeks itself. I saw not, and therefore I cannot say, how the heavenly hawks moved, but I surely saw both one and the other in motion. Hearing their green wings cleave the air the serpent fled, and the angels wheeled upward to their posts, flying back abreast. The shade which had drawn close to the judge when he called, through all that assault had not a moment loosed its gaze from me. "So

La picciola vallea, era una biscia,
Forse qual diede ad Eva il cibo amaro.
Tra l' erba e i fior venia la mala striscia,
Volgendo ad or ad or la testa al dosso,
Leccando come bestia che si liscia.°
Io nol vidi, e però dicer nol posso,
Come mosser gli astor celestiali:
Ma vidi bene e l' uno e l' altro mosso.
Sentendo fender l' aere alle verdi ali,
Fuggi il serpente, e gli Angeli dier volta
Suso alle poste rivolando iguali.
L' ombra che s' era al Giudice raccolta,
Quando chiamò, per tutto quell' assalto
Punto non fu da me guardare sciolta.
Se la lucerna che ti mena in alto,

° e il dosso Lecc. 2, Ald. Land. Bi.

108 Cf. Odyssey, B. 149.
may the lantern which is leading thee on high find in thy will-candle so much as needs to reach the enamel of the summit,” it began, “if thou knowest true news of Valdimagra,” or of its neighbourhood, tell it to me, for once was I great there. I was called Conrad Malaspina; I

Truòi nel tuo arbitrio tanta cera,
Quanèt è mestìro infino al sommo smalto,
Cominciò ella: se novella vera
Di Valdimagra, o di parte vicina
Sai, dilla a me, che già grande là era.
Chiamato fui Currado Malaspina.\(^d\)

\(^d\) _Fu già chiam. Gg. Fu io, 124._

112 “May God’s grace” (typified by the lantern, as by Lucia) “find in thy free-will sufficient material whereon to act;” or, as Philalethes well renders: “Soll jene Leuchte, die dich führt nach oben, So vieles Oel in deinen Willen finden.” The construction is the same as in ii. 16,
v. 85, etc.

114 Smalto. The flower-enamelled summit of the mountain. So the meadow in which the great men of pre-Christian times walk is called (Inf. iv. 118) “il verde smalto.” Others take it as meaning the highest heaven.

116, 118 Valdimagra. The Magra rises at the N. end of the province of Lunigiana and flows into the sea just E. of the Gulf of Spezia. Of this territory the Malaspina were lords at the end of the thirteenth century. This Conrad appears to have been grandson of the “Antico” and cousin of Moroello, the “Vapor di Valdimagra” of Inf. xxiv.
145, who was not only a Guelf, but a leader of the “Black” party, while Conrad would appear, from Boccaccio (Day ii. Nov. 6), to have been a Ghibeline. There is, however, some obscurity as to the politics of the family, but Dante had grounds of personal gratitude enough to outweigh any political differences in the case of a house under whose protection he was living in 1306 and 1307. The Purgatory was dedicated to a Moroello Malaspina, probably a cousin’s son to the Moroello above named; Foscolo thinks to Spinetta, the friend of Uguccione and Can della Scala. Villani does not mention them, but see Philalethes here, and Balbo, Vita di Dante, part ii. ch. 6, also Bianchi’s note, for the genealogy of the family.
am not the Ancient, but I am descended from him; I bare to mine the love which here is purified.” “Oh,” said I to him, “through your country I never was; but where dwell there men throughout all Europe, that it is not known? The fame that honours your house shouts forth its lords, and shouts forth the country, so that he knows of it who never yet was there. And I swear to you, so may I go on high, that your honoured race ceases not to be adorned with the glory of the purse and of the sword.
Custom and nature so privilege it, that whereas the guilty

Non son l’antico, ma di lui discesi:
A’ miei portai l’amor che qui raffina.
120
O, dissi lui, per li vostri paesi
giammai non fui: ma dove si dimora
Per tutta Europa, ch’ei non sien palesi?
La fama che la vostra casa onora,
Grida i signori, e grida la contrada,
Sl che ne sa chi non vi fu ancora.
Ed io vi giuro, s’io di sopra vada,
Che vostra gente onrata non si sfregia
Del pregio della borsa e della spada.
Uso e natura si la privilegia,
130

Certo, diss’io, Ott.

120 “Portai tanto amore a’ miei, che io ne lasciai la cura dell’anima, ed indugiai l’opere meritorie della salute per guerreggiare ed acquistare amici; il quale amore qui si cimenta e purga.” Ottimo.
126 Notice vostra as denoting respect. Cf. Inf. xv. 30, and see Diez iii. 50.
129 Landino, though in his text he has sfregia, seems by his note to prefer fregia, and takes borsa and spada in a bad sense. Gg. has non si fregia (sic), “i.e. non deornatur et spoliatur.”
head is turning the world astray, it alone goes straight, and despises the evil road.” And he: “Go now, for the sun lays not himself seven times more in the bed which the Ram covers and bestrides with all four feet, but this courteous opinion will be fastened in the midst of thy head with stronger nails than of another’s speech; if course of doom be not arrested.”

Che perché il capo reo lo mondo torca,
Sola va dritta, e il mal cammin disprezza.
Ed egli: Or va, che il Sol non si ricorca
Sette volte nel letto che il Montone
Con tutti e quattro i piè cuopre ed inorca,
Che cocausta cortese opinione
Ti fia chiavata in mezzo della testa
Con maggior chiovi che d’altrui sermone,
Se corso di giudicio non s’arresta.

133 The usual interpretation seems the best, which understands by capo reo, the pope Boniface VIII. Landino passes over the words in silence, a pretty clear proof how he understood them. Vellutello talks some astounding nonsense about the pommel (capo) of the sword being kept downwards. Blanc prefers to take mondo as the subject, “whereas the world turns aside its guilty head,” sc. from the right path.

133, 134 I.e. the spring equinox will not recur seven times. See note, l. 116.
CANTO IX.

ARGUMENT.

Dante falls asleep, and dreams a dream of an eagle. Second sunrise. In his sleep he is borne by Lucy to the door of Purgatory, where he finds an angel, seated over three steps of divers stone. The angel admits them into Purgatory, but first makes certain marks on Dante’s forehead.

The bedfellow of ancient Tithonus was already growing white on the gallery of the east, forth from the arms of her sweet paramour; her forehead was bright with gems, placed in the figure of the cold animal that smites folk with

La concubina di Titone antico,
Già s’imbiancava al balzo d’oriente,
Fuor delle braccia del suo dolce amico:
Di gemme la sua fronte era lucente,
Poste in figura del freddo animale,
Che con la coda percuote la gente:

a balco Cass. W.

--- See note at end of this Canto.

1 N.B. the form Titone for Titono. Scart. reads Titan, meaning the sun, his concubina being the sea. There is little authority for the reading; nor need more be desired.

2 S’imbiancava, so s’impingua, Par. x. 96.
its tail; and the night, of the steps wherewith she mounts, had in the place where we were made two, and the third was already inclining downward its wings, when I, who had with me part of what was Adam's, overcome by sleep reclined on the grass, there where, all five, already we were sitting.

In the hour when the swallow begins her sad lays, near to the morning, perhaps in memory of her former woes, and when our mind, pilgrim rather from the flesh, and less bound by its thought, is in its visions as it were divine; in a dream I seemed to see an eagle with feathers of gold,

E la notte de' passi con che sale
 Fatti avea due nel luogo ov' eravamo,
 E il terzo già chinava ingiùso l' ale:
Quand' io che meco avea di quel d' Adamo,
 Vinto dal sonno in su l' erba inchinai,
 Là 've già tutti e cinque sedevamo.
Nell' ora che comincia i tristi lai
 La rondinella presso alla mattina,
 Forse a memoria de' suoi primi guai,
E che la mente nostra pellegrina
 Più dalla carne, e men da' pensier presa,
 Alle sue vision quasi è divina,
In soggno mi parea veder sospesa
 Un' aquila nel ciel con penne d' oro,

12 Tutti e cinque. Dante, Virgil, Sordello, Nino, Conrad.
16, 17 Blanc thinks the construction here “eetwas gezwungene,” and perhaps there is an objection to the form in which the sentence is cast, “più pellegrina,” and “men presa” being only apparently antithetical. The sense is however plain.
19 For this and the other dreams seen by Dante in Purgatory, see note to Canto xxvii.
poised in heaven, with its wings open and astrain to swoop. And meseemed I was in that place where his friends were abandoned by Ganymede, when he was ravished to the consistory on high. Within myself I thought, perhaps it strikes by custom only here, and perhaps from another place it disdains to bear away aloft in its claw. Then meseemed that having wheeled a little more terrible as a thunderbolt it descended, and snatched me upward as far as the fire. There it seemed that it and I burned, and so the imagined conflagration scorched, that it behoved that my sleep broke. Not otherwise Achilles shook himself, turning his awakened eyes

Con l'ali aperte, ed a calare intesa:
Ed esser mi parea là dove foro
Abbandonati i suoi da Ganime,
Quando fu ratto al sommo concistoro.
Fra me pensava: Forse questa fede
Pur qui per uso, e forse d' altro loco
Disdegna di portarne suso in piede.
Poi mi parea che più rotata un poco, b
Terribil come folgor discendesse,
E me rapisse suso infino al foco.
Ivi pareva ch' ella ed io ardesse,
E sì lo incendio immaginato cosse,
Che convenne che il sonno si rompesse.
Non altrimenti Achille si riscosse,
Gli occhi svegliati rivolgendo in giro,

b che roteata W. che poi r. Gg. Cass.

\[23\] I.e. on Ida.
\[30\] foco. The sphere of fire, or empyrean. See Conv. ii. 4.
\[33\] sqq. See Statius, Ach. i., especially lines 247 sqq.
around, and not knowing where he was, when his mother from Chiron carried him across sleeping in her arms to Scyros, the place whence afterwards the Greeks made him depart, than did I shake myself, so soon as from my face sleep fled, and I became all amort, as does the man who freezes in his fear. Beside me was my Comforter alone, and the sun was already more than two hours high, and my face was turned to the sea. "Have no fear," said my Master, "make thyself secure, for we are at a good point; contract not, but widen all thy force. Thou art from this point come

E non sapendo là dove si fosse:
Quando la madre da Chirone a Schiro
Trafugò lui dormendo in le sue braccia,
 Là onde poi gli Greci il dipartiro:
Che mi scoss'io, sì come dalla faccia
Mi fuggi il sonno, e diventai ismerto,
Come fa l'uom che spaventato agghiaccia.
Da lato m'era solo il mio conforto,
E il Sole er' alto già più di due ore,
E il viso m'era alla marina torto.
Non aver tema, disse il mio Signore:
Fatti sicur, chè noi siamo a buon punto:
Non stringer, ma rallarga ogni vigore.
Tu se' omai al Purgatorio giunto:

accaccia Gg. accaccia Cass. 12345.

si fosse. So si is used with sapere, v. 135; with guatere xx. l. 132; so ti stavi vi. 62. So, too, io mi sono xxiv. 52, xxvii. 101.
See Diez iii. 176.

si come. Cf. Par. xxiv. 152, where it corresponds with tosto che in l. 150. So "just as" is used in English both of time and manner.
to Purgatory; see there the gallery which closes it round; see the entry there where it appears disjoined. Ere this, in the dawn which goes before the day, when thy soul was sleeping within thee on the flowers, wherewith it is adorned down yonder, came a dame, and said: 'I am Lucy; let me take this man who sleeps, so will I speed him on his way.' Sordello remained, and the other noble forms; she took thee up, and, as the day was clear, went her way upward, and I in her track. Here laid she thee; and first her fair eyes showed me that entry open; then she and sleep to-

Vedi là il balzo, che il chiude intorno:
Vedi l' entrata là 've par disgiunto.
Dianzi, nell' alba che precede al giorno,
Quando l' anima tua dentro dormia,
Sopra li fiori, onde laggiù è adorno,
Venne una donna, e disse: Io son Lucia:
Lasciatemi pigliar costui che dorme:
Sì l' agevolerò per la sua via.
Sordel rimase, e l' altre gentil forme:
Ella ti tolse, e come il di fu chiaro,
Sen venne suso, ed io per le sue orme.
Qui ti posò: e pria mi dimostraro
Gli occhi suoi belli quell' entrata aperta:
Poi ella e il sonno ad una se n' andarono.

55 For Lucia, symbolising, say the commentators, illuminant grace, see Inf. ii. 97; and with the whole of this passage compare the way in which Dante is brought in an unconscious swoon to the edge of Hell. Inf. iii. and iv.

56 forme = anime, the soul being the form, in the metaphysical sense, of the body. De An. ii. 1: ἀναγκαίων τὴν ψυχήν οὐσίαν εἶναι ὡς εἴδος σώματος φυσικοῦ. So Aquinas S.T. Part i. i. Qu. 76, passim; and Canto xviii. 49.
gether went their way." In fashion of a man who in doubt reassures himself, and who turns into comfort his fear, after that the truth is disclosed to him, myself I changed; and as my leader saw me free from care, he moved upward along the ledge, and I behind him toward the height.

Reader, thou seest well how I exalt my matter, and therefore wonder not if with more art I sustain it.

We drew us near, and were at such a part that there where first had seemed to me a breach, only like a crack which parts a wall, I saw a gate, and three steps below

A guisa d’uom che in dubbio si racconta,
    E che muta in conforto sua paura,\(^d\)
Poi che la verità gli è discorsa,
Mi cambia’ io: e come senza cura
    Videmi il Duca mio, su per lo balzo
Si mosse, ed io diretto inver l’altura.
Lettor, tu vedi ben, com’io innalzo
    La mia materia, e però con più arte
Non ti maravigliar s’io la rincalzo.
Noi ci appressammo, ed eravamo in parte,
    Che là, dove paremi prima un rotto,
Pur come un fesso che muro diparte,
Vidi una porta, e tre gradi di sotto

\(^d\) E mutin conf. Cass. 14; e mutin ne 2; e muti per 3; e che muti in c. Ald. Land. Bi.; e che muta c. 5; e indi riconforta G9.

\(^{65}\) The reading muti seems the less satisfactory, because there does not appear to be any need for the harsh change from the indic. raccerta; though but for this we might perhaps expect a subjunctive. See Diez iii. 345.

\(^{72}\) rincalzo. Par. xxi. 130.
it to go to it, divers of colours, and a porter who as yet spake no word. And as I opened more and more my eye to it, I saw that he sat over the highest step, such in his face that I endured it not; and he had a naked sword in his hand, which reflected the rays so towards us, that I directed often my sight in vain. "Tell me, from where ye stand, what would ye?" he began to say; "where is your escort? Look to it, that to come upward hurt you not." "A dame of Heaven, knowing of these things," answered my Master to him, "but ere now said to us: 'Go thither, there is the gate.'" "And may she further your steps to good," began again the courteous gatekeeper; "come then forward

Per gire ad essa, di color diversi,
Ed un portier, che ancor non facea motto.
E come l'occhio più e più v'apersi,
Vidil seder sopra il grado soprano,
Tal nella faccia, ch'io non lo soffersi:
Ed una spada nuda aveva in mano,
Che riflettea i raggi sì ver noi,
Ch'io dirizzava spesso il viso in vano:
Ditel costinci, che volete voi?
Cominciò egli a dire: ov'è la scorta?
Guardate che il venir su non vi noi.
Donna del Ciel, di queste cose accorta,
Rispose il mio Maestro a lui, pur dianzi
Ne disse: Andate là, quivi è la porta.
Ed ella i passi vostri in bene avanzi,
Ricominciò il cortese portinaio:
Venite dunque a' nostri gradi innanzi.

79 So xiii. 46.
to our stair.” There came we; and the first stair was white marble, so polished and rubbed that I was mirrored in it as I appear. The second, tinted more deeply than perse, was of a rugged and fire-burnt rock, cracked through its length and across. The third, which masses itself above, seemed to me porphry so flaming as blood which spirts forth from

Là ne venimmo : e lo scaglion primaio
Bianco marmo era sl pulito e terso,
Ch’io mi specchiai in esso quale io paio.
Era il secondo tinto più che perso,
D’una petrina ruvida ed arsiccia,
Crepata per lo lungo e per traverso.
Lo terzo, che di sopra s’ammassiccia,
Porfido mi parea sì fiammeggiante,
Come sangue che fuor di vena spiccia.

\textsuperscript{94} \textit{La ove (or 've) venimmo allo sc. Cass. Gg. 12345 W. La ci traemmo allo, Caet.}

\textsuperscript{95} Much has been written about the symbolical meaning of these three steps. There is no question but that they denote the state of mind with which penance is to be approached; or as Miss Rossetti, “Shadow of Dante,” well puts it: “Candid confession mirroring the whole man, mournful contrition breaking the hard heart of the gazer on the Cross; love all atame offering up in satisfaction the life-blood of body, soul, and spirit.” The rest of the passage may be read with advantage.

\textsuperscript{97} \textit{Perso. “è un colore misto di purpureo e di nero, ma vince il nero.” Conv. iv. 20. “aer perso.” Inf. v. 89. “buia molto più che persa.” Ib. vii. 103. In Chaucer, prologue to “Canterbury Tales,” l. 439, we read of the Doctor of Physic that “In sanguine and in perse he clad was all”; where, by the way, Dr. Morris can hardly be right in explaining it as “a bluish-gray,” “sky-blue.”

\textsuperscript{99} It is curious that Miss Rossetti should have been (apparently) the first commentator to detect the obvious allusion to the Cross in the cracking of the stone in its length and breadth.
a vein. Upon this the Angel of God was holding both his feet, sitting on the threshold, which seemed to me a rock of adamant. Over the three steps upward with a good will my leader drew me, saying: “Ask humbly that he undo the lock.” Devout I threw myself at the holy feet; I asked for mercy, and that he would open to me; but first upon my breast three times I smote myself. Seven P’s upon my forehead he described with the point of the sword, and “See that thou wash, when thou art within, these strokes,” said he. Cinder, or earth that should crack with drought, would be of one colour with his vestment, and from beneath this he drew two keys.

Sopra questo teneva ambo le piante
L’ Angel di Dio, sedendo in su la soglia,
Che mi sembiava pietra di diamante.
Per li tre gradi su di buona voglia
Mi trasse il Duca mio, dicendo: Chiedi
Umilemente che ’l serrame scioglia.
Divoto mi gittai a santi piedi:
Misericordia chiesi e che m’aprisse,
Ma pria nel petto tre fiate mi diedi.f
Sette P nella fronte mi descrisse
Col punton della spada; e, Fa’ che lavi,
Quando se’ dentro, queste piaghe, disse.
Cenere o terra che secca si cavi,
D’ un color fora col suo vestimento:
E di sotto da quel trasse due chiavi.

f tre volte Gaez. etc.

— For this use of dare, cf. xxiv. 148; and such expression as “dar nel brocco” (to hit the mark).
— Seven P’s (Peccato) for the seven deadly sins.
The one was of gold, and the other was of silver; first with the white, and afterward with the yellow, he dealt with the gate so that I was content. "Whenever one of these keys fails, so that it does not turn straight through the keyhole," said he to us, "this gap opens not. One is more costly, but the other needs much of art and wit ere it unlocks, because it is that which disentangles the knot. From Peter I hold them; and he bade that I should err rather toward opening than toward keeping it locked, so only that the folk prostrated themselves at my feet." Then he pushed open the sacred door, saying: "Enter, but

L' una era d' oro, e l' altra era d' argento:
Pria con la bianca, e poscia con la gialla
Fece alla porta sì ch' io fui contento.
Quandunque l' una d' este chiavi falla,
Che non si volga dritta per la toppa,
Diss' egli a noi, non s' apre questa calla.
Più cara è l' una; ma l' altra vuol troppa
D' arte e d' ingegno avanti che disserri,
Perch' ell' è quella che il nodo disgroppa.
Da Pier le tengo: e dissemi, ch' io erri
Anzi ad aprir, che a tenerla serrata;
Pur che la gente a' piedi mi s' atterri.
Poi pinse l' uscio alla porta sacrata,
Dicendo: Intrate; ma facciavi accorti

118 The silver key is the science which discerns the true penitent; the golden, the power of absolution, more costly, because purchased by the death of Christ. See Philalethes here, who refers to Aquinas S.T. iii. Suppl. Q. 17. "On the entity and quiddity of the keys."

123 calla. See iv. 22.
I do you to wit that forth returns whoso looks him back.” And when upon the hinges were turned the pins of that holy portal, which are of metal, resounding and strong, Tarpeia bellowed not so, nor showed herself so shrill, when taken from her was the good Metellus, whereby afterwards she remained lean. I turned me round attentive to the first tone, and methought I heard Te Deum laudamus, in a voice mingled with the sweet harmony. Just such an

Che di fuor torna chi indietro si guata.
E quando fur ne' cardini distorti
Gli spigoli di quella regge sacra
Che di metallo son sonanti e forti,
Non rugglo sì, nè si mostrò sì acra
Tarpeia, come tolto le fu il buono
Metello, per che poi rimase macra.
Io mi rivolsi attento al primo tuono,
E Te Deum laudamus, mi parea
Udire in voce mista al dolce suono.

8 donde poi Ald. Land.

132 si guata. See note, L. 36.
136 Alluding to Lucan’s description of the plunder of the temple of Saturn by Caesar, in spite of the opposition of the tribune Metellus. Pharsalia iii. 115–168, especially L. 153 sqq.:

“Protinus abducto matuerunt templum Metello,
Tunc rupest Tarpeia sonat, magnoque reclusas Testatur stridore fores.”

and 167, 168—

“Tristi spoliantur templum rapina,
Pauperiorque fuit tunc primum Caesare Roma.”

139 rivolssi, i.e.: “I turned away from the gate;” not, of course, back towards it, which had just been forbidden; tuono, merely the sound of music heard from within, not as some take it, of the gate opening or closing. See x. 4–6.
image gave me that which I heard, as one is wont to receive when they stand to sing with an organ, when now are heard the words and now are not.

Tale immagine appunto mi rendea
Ciò ch’io udiva, qual prender si suole,
Quando a cantar con organi si stea:
Che or sì or no s’intendon le parole.

144 organi, plural, because the instrument consists of a number of pipes. So in old French orgue is sometimes used of a single instrument.

NOTE TO LINES 1–9.

There is much controversy as to the time indicated in these lines. The analogy of the two following nights would make it probable that Dante does not fall asleep until towards morning; and the bedfellow of Tithonus, according to all mythology, should only be Aurora. But from the fourteenth century downwards, commentators, with few exceptions, have agreed in understanding the phenomena to be those of moonrise, chiefly on the ground that when the sun is in Aries, Scorpio is too far off for its stars to appear as gems on the forehead of the dawn. They then interpret the passi as hours, and fix the time at two to three hours after sunset. But it must be remarked that all these interpretations omit to notice that this is the moon of the spring equinox, which in Italy would not rise at four days after the full until past eleven o’clock, while, being the “harvest-moon” of the other hemisphere, it would rise “nel loco ov’eravamo,” about seven. It would seem from x. 14 that Dante did not forget this difference between the two hemispheres. Anyhow, it is not likely that so accurate an observer would overlook the rapid latening of moonrise at this season here, and in neither case can passi denote hours. Secondly, the Right Ascension of this moon, at this age, is about sixteen hours, which puts her right among the stars of Scorpio (though in the sign of Sagittarius), so that no more would those stars be gems on the forehead of the lunar dawn. Now it is hardly possible to doubt that Dante is describing the phenomena from his own observation; and if anyone will do the same, he will, I think, see that at the beginning of April, when the dawn is just beginning to "whiten" in the east, i.e. about three A.M., the constellation Scorpio is just on the meridian, in which position it may be said to be on the forehead of the dawn. In England it is low; but in Italy, and, of course, still more in Purgatory (say 32° S.), it would be much higher. Passi I understand to be "signs," though there is, on any explanation, some confusion in lines 7–9; but line 9 can only refer to something which goes downward. Now the "night" (ii. 4) is in Libra, and the Signs "with which she rises" are Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius. The first two are past, and the third (which, by the pre-cession of the equinoxes, would about correspond with Scorpio the constellation), is just turning the meridian. On the whole, therefore, I agree with Bianchi in understanding the passage in its obvious meaning, though I do not hold with Prof. Mossotti, whom he quotes, in supposing the "freddo animale" to be the Fish, the stars of which are too insignificant to form a feature. As a slight corroboration it may be added that the poets, from Petrarch to Redi, have used such expressions as "amica," "fanciulla," "druda di Titone," for the sundawn. The resemblance to Iliad κ. 251–253 is curious, but can hardly be more than accidental.
CANTO X.

ARGUMENT.

The first or lowest circle of Purgatory, where those are purified who have sinned through pride. They see certain images carved on the rock wherein acts of humility are commemorated. As they stay to look at these, the souls overtake them, each bearing on his back a heavy burden.

After we were within the threshold of the gate which evil love makes unfrequented of souls, because it makes the crooked way seem straight, I heard by its resounding that it

Poi fummo dentro al soglio della porta
Che il malo amor dell' anime disusa,
Perchè fa parer dritta la via torta,
Sonando la senti' esser richiusa:

1 Poi for poiche. So xv. 34. Par. ii. 56. Conv. ii. 7. Even in later Italian this omission of che is almost as common as the similar omission of that in English. Such constructions as "giudicava necessario gli fusse data la signoria," may be found in Macchiavelli passim. Diez iii. 312, 339.

2 It seems better to treat disusa as a verb like disgravare (Inf. xxx. 144), etc., than to take dell' anime as a genitive depending on amor. malo amor, see xvii. 85 sqq.
was shut; and if I had turned my eyes to it what excuse had been meet for of the fault?

We were mounting through a cleft in the rock, which kept shifting on one side and the other like as a wave that recedes and draws near. "Here it behoves to use a little art," began my leader, "in approaching now this way now that, to the side (where it parts.") And this made our steps so scant that the wanéd moon returned to her bed for her setting before that we were forth from that needle's eye. But

E s'io avessi gli occhi voltì ad essa,
Qual fora stata al fallo degna scusa?
Noi salavam per una pietra fessa,
Che si moveva d'una e d'altra parte,
Sì come l'onda che fugge e s'appressa.
Qui si convien usare un poco d'arte,
Cominciò il Duca mio, in accostarsi
Or quinci or quindi al lato che si parte.
E ciò fece li nostri passi scarsì
Tanto, che pria lo scemo della Luna
Rigunse al letto suo per ricorcarsi,
Che noi fossimo fuor di quella cruna.

6  degna a.  So Inf. i. 122, ii. 33.
8,9  It is not necessary to suppose with Padre d'Aquino (vid. Blanc, Erklärungen) that a physical movement of the rocks is meant. Dante does not multiply miracles unnecessarily.
14, 15  See note to ix. 1. This moon at this age would set to the other side of the world a little before midday. They have thus occupied three hours, or thereabouts, since Dante woke (ix. 44) in reaching this point.
when we were free and in the open space above, where the mount gathers itself back, I wearied, and both uncertain of our way, we halted above in a level place more solitary than roads through deserts. From its rim, where the void bounds it, to the foot of the high bank which only rises, a human body would in thrice have measured; and so far as my eye could wing its flight, whether on the left or the right hand, this cornice appeared to me alike. Our feet were not yet moved thereupon, when I perceived that bank which lacked right of ascent, to be of marble all about, white, and

Ma quando fummo liberi ed aperti
Su, dove il monte indietro si rauna,
Io stancato, ed ambedue incerti
Di nostra via, ristemmo su in un piano
Solingo più che strade per diserti.
Dalla sua sponda, ove confina il vano,
Appiè dell’ altra ripa, che pur sale,
Misurrebbe in tre volte un corpo umano:
E quanto l’ occhio mio potea trar d’ ale,
Or dal sinistro ed or dal destro fianco,
Questa cornice mi parea cotale.
Lassù non eran mossi i piè nostri anco,
Quand’ io conobbi quella ripa intorno,
Che dritto di salita aveva manco,
Esser di marmo candido, ed adorno

c Che dritta di s. Gg. 3; diritta Cass.

3 che pur sale, i.e. has no slope, but rises perpendicularly.
30 I.e. the inner side, where the mountain rose steeply.
adorned so with sculptures, that not only Polycleitus, but nature herself would have had shame there. The angel that came on earth with the decree of the many years wept for peace, which opened Heaven from its long refusal, before us appeared so truly sculptured there in a gentle act, that it seemed not a mute image. One would have sworn that he said Ave, because there was imaged she who turned the key to open the high love. And she had upon her action this speech imprinted—Ecce ancilla Dei! as aptly as a figure is made on wax by a seal. "Fix not thy mind on one place only," said the sweet Master, who had me on that side where

D' intagli sì, che non pur Policreto,
Ma la natura lì avrebbe scorno.\textsuperscript{d}

L' Angel che venne in terra col decreto
Della molt' anni lagrimata pace,
Che aperse il Ciel dal suo lungo divieto,

Dinanzi a noi pareva sì verace
Quivi intagliato in un atto soave,
Che non sembiava immagine che tace.

Giurato si saria, ch' ei dicesse Ave:
Perchè quivi era immaginata quella,
Che ad aprir l' alto amor volse la chiave.

Ed avea in atto impressa esta favella,
Ecce ancilla Dei, sì propriamente,
Come figura in cera si suggella.
Non tener pure ad un luogo la mente,
Disse il dolce Maestro, che m' avea

\textsuperscript{d} gli avrebbe Cass. Ald. Land. Bi.

\textsuperscript{3} intagli seems anciantly to have been used of any carving, not necessarily sunk in. Thus the Chiose call Polycleitus "uno de più sommi intagliatori del mondo."
folk have the heart; wherefore I turned me with my face and behind Mary saw on that side where I had him who was urging me, another history placed upon the rock; wherefore I passed Virgil and put myself near, so that it might be set out before my eyes. There in the very marble was there carved the car and the oxen drawing the sacred ark, whereby men fear an office not entrusted to them. Before it folk appeared; and all of them, divided into seven choirs, caused two of my senses to say, the one "No," the other, "Yes, they sing." In like manner at the smoke of the

Da quella parte, onde il core ha la gente:
Perch'io mi volsi col viso, e vedea e
Diretro da Maria per quella costa,
Onde m'era colui che mi movea,
Un'altra storia nella roccia imposta:
Perch'io varcai Virgilio, e femmi presso,
Acciocchè fosse agli occhi miei disposta.
Era intagliato il nel marmo stesso
Lo carro e i buoi traendo l'arca santa;
Perchè si teme ufficio non commesso.
Dinanzi parea gente; e tutta quanta
Partita in sette cori, a duo miei sensi
Faceva dir: l'un No, l'altro Sì canta. e Similemente al fumo degl'incensi,

e mi mossi Gg. Cass. Land. W.
' Facea dicer Ald. Bi.; Facean l'un dir Cass.

48,51 Observe the use of onde, where we should use where. The Italian, like the Latin, regards the bearing of an object from the spectator, rather than its absolute place; thus we have "da man sinistra" (iii. 58), and in Latin, such phrases as "a contumelia quam a laude propius."—Tacitus.
55 sqq. 2 Samuel, chap. vi.
incense which there was imaged, the eyes too and the nose became discordant in “Yes” and “No.” There was going before the blessed vessel, dancing, with garments girt high, the humble Psalmist, and more and less than king was he in that case. Portrayed opposite, in a view of a great palace, Michal was looking on, as a dame despiteful and sad. I moved my feet from the place where I was standing to look from anear at another history which I saw gleaming white behind Michal. Here was narrated the high glory of the Roman prince, whose great worth moved Gregory to his

Che v'era immaginato, e gli occhi el naso,
Ed al sì ed al no discordi sensi.
Li precedeva al benedetto vaso,
Trescando alzato, l’umile Salmista,
E più e men che re era in quel caso.
Di contra effigiata ad una vista
D’un gran palazzo Micol ammirava,
Sì come donna dispettosa e trista.
Io mossi i piè del loco dov’io stava,
Per avvisar da presso un’altra storia,
Che diretro a Micol mi biancheaggiava.
Quivi era storiata l’alta gloria
Del Roman prince, lo cui gran valore
Mosse Gregorio alla sua gran vittoria:

64 vasō. Cf. xxxiii. 34.
65 Others, e.g. Bianchi, take alzato as “rising in the air;” but cf. Par. xxii. 132. Here it probably represents the “accinctus” of the Vulgate.
great victory; I mean of Trajan the emperor; and a poor woman was at his bridle, in attitude of tears and of grief. About him it seemed trampled and full of horsemen, and the eagles in gold over him moved, in seeming, to the wind. The poor woman among all these seemed to be saying: "Sir, avenge me for my son who is dead, whereof I grieve my heart." And he to answer her: "Wait now so long until I return." And she: "My lord" (as a person in whom grief is urgent), "if thou return not?" And he:

Io dico di Traiano Imperadore:
   Ed una vedovella gli era al freno
   Di lagrime atteggiata e di dolore.
   Dintorno a lui parea calcato e pieno
   Di cavalieri, e l’aquile nell’oro
   Sovr’esso in vista al vento si movièno.
La miserella infra tutti costoro
   Parea dicer: Signor, fammi vendetta
   Del mio figliuol, ch’è morto, ond’io m’accoro.
   Ed egli a lei rispondere: Ora aspetta,
   Tanto ch’io torni. E quella: Signor mio,
   Come persona in cui dolor s’affretta:

\[e\text{ aquile Gg. dell’ oro Bi. Bl.}\]

The prayers of St. Gregory the Great were said to have freed Trajan from Hell, in recompense for this good deed. See Par. xx. 106. The story may be found in Philalethes’s note, and most commentaries.

\[\text{nell’ oro.} \] This reading seems to have far the most authority; but it is impossible to accept the view of Witte, Scartazzini, and others that it means "worked on a gold ground." Dante must have known that the eagles were not banners, as sculptured representations of Roman triumphs, etc., are common. \[\text{nell’ oro for “made of gold” (Fr. en or) is rare. One is tempted to suggest in alloro, “laurel-wreathed.”}\]

\[\text{Tanto che.} \] See iv. 51. The action being future, the verb is in the subjunctive.
"He who will be where I am will do it for thee." And she: "What will another's good deed be to thee if thy own thou puttest out of mind?" Wherefore he: "Now comfort thyself, for it behoves that I perform my duty before I move. Justice will have it, and pity holds me back." He who never beheld a new thing drew forth this visible speech, new to us, because it is not found here.

While I was delighting myself with gazing on the images of such humble deeds, and, for their craftsman's sake, dear to behold: "Lo on this side, but the paces they make are few," murmured the Poet, "are much folk; they will put us in the way to the higher steps." My eyes, which were

Se tu non torni? Ed ei: Chi fia dov'io,
   La ti farà. Ed ella: L'altrui bene
   A te che fia, se il tuo metti in obblio?
Ond'elli: Or ti conforta; che conviene
   Ch'io solva il mio dovere, anzi ch'io muova:
   Giustizia vuole, e pietà mi ritiene.
Colui, che mai non vide cosa nuova,
   Produsse esto visibile parlare,
   Novello a noi, perchè qui non si truova.
Mentr'io mi dilettava di guardare
   L'immagini di tante umilitadi,
   E per lo fabbro loro a vedere care;
Ecco di qua, ma fanno i passi radi,
   Mormorava il Poeta, molte genti:
   Questi ne invieranno agli alti gradi.

1 meneranno Gg.

100 I.e. from the left, Virgil being now on that side of Dante. See note to iii. 89.
intent to look, for seeing new things whereof they are fain, in turning toward him were not slow. I would not, however, reader, that thou shouldest be dismayed of a good purpose, for hearing how God wills that the debt be paid. Think not of the form of the punishment; consider that which follows, consider that at worst, beyond the great sentence it cannot go. I began: "Master, they whom I see to move toward us seem not to me persons, and I know not what; so fail I in my sight." And he to me: "The grievous condition of their torment bows them so to earth that my eyes

Gli occhi miei, ch'a mirar crano intenti; k
Per veder novitadi onde son vaghi,
Volgendosi ver lui non furon lenti.
Non vo' però, Lettor, che tu ti smagli
Di buon proponimento, per udire
Come Dio vuol che il debito si paghi.
Non attendier la forma del martire:
Pensa la successión: pensa che a peggio, 110
Oltre la gran sentenza non può ire.
Io cominciai: Maestro, quei ch'io veggo
Muover ver noi, non mi sembran persone,
E non so che; si nel veder vaneggio. 1
Ed egli a me: La grave condizione
Di lor tormento a terra gli rannicchia, k eran contenti Cass. Gg. W.  E non so, s'io Land. etc.

106 For this meaning of però (per hoc) cf. vii. 55, xiii. 26. In Spanish it is more common; indeed, the word has come to mean simply "but." The connection of this meaning with the original may be seen from Eng. "for all that." Dante means "do not be dismayed or despair at hearing of the penalty inflicted on even penitent sinners."

110 N.B. omission of the art. with peggio. Witte, without much authority, inserts it.

114 vaneggio; so render vano, viii. 7. Cf. xviii. 143.
first were thereat strained. But look fixedly there, and disentangle with thy sight him who is coming below those to anyway, of course, and have confidence in your backward paces, do ye not perceive that we are worms, born to form the angelic butterfly which flies without screen to the judgment?
For what does your mind float on high, since ye are as it were defective insects, like a worm in which formation is in default?

Si, che i miei occhi a n' ebbè tenzone.
Ma guardà fiso là, e disviticchia
Col viso quel che vien sotto a quei sassi:
Già scorgere puoi come ciascun si picchia.

O superbi Cristian, miseri, lassi,
Che della vista della mente infermi,
Fidanza avete ne' ritrosi passi:
Non v' accorgete voi, che noi siam vermi,
Nati a formar l' angelica farfalla,
Che vola alla giustizia senza schermi?
Di che l' anima vostra in alto galla?
Poi siete quasi entomata in difetto,

118 disviticchiare, properly, to put vines aside in order to see through them.
120 There is another reading, si nicchia: "cries as a woman in travail."
122 Imitated by Petrarch, Tri. of Fame iii.
126 Cf. xxii. 64–66.
128 entomata. Blanc (Erklärungen) thinks that Dante, who was not more of a Greek scholar than others of his time, was misled by the Evropa, τά of a dictionary, and compares the "autentín" "hormín"
As, to support a floor or roof, by way of corbel, one sometimes sees a figure join the knees to the breast, the which, out of its untruth, causes a true discomfort in whoso sees it, thus saw I these shaped, when I well gave heed. True is it that they were more and less drawn together, according as they had more or less on their backs; and he who had most endurance in his mien, weeping seemed to say, “I can no more.”

Sl come verme, in cui formazion falla.
Come per sostentar solaio o tetto,  130
Per mensola talvolta una figura
Si vede giunger le ginocchia al petto,
La qual fa del non ver vera rancura
Nascer a chi la vede; così fatti
Vid’ io color, quando posi ben cura.
Ver è che più e meno eran contratti,
Secondo ch’avean più e meno addosso:
E qual più pazienza avea negli atti,
Piangendo parea dicer: Più non posso.

of Conv. iv. In his Dictionary, however, he inclines to agree with Bianchi, who thinks it is formed on the analogy of poemata. The remark of the Ottimo is amusing: “Poiche voi siete cosi diffettuosi, quasi antomata che è una figura in difettuoso parlare.” Post. Cass. understands, atoms, motes.
CANTO XI.

ARGUMENT.

The first circle continued. The souls, as they go along, recite the Lord's Prayer. Dante talks with Omberto Aldobrandeschi, and Oderisi of Agubbio, who also shows him Provenzano Salvani.

"Our Father, who in the heavens abidest, not as circumscribed, but through the greater love which Thou hast to the first effects on high, praised be Thy name and Thy worth by every creature, as it is meet to render thanks to Thy sweet Spirit. Let the peace of Thy kingdom come to

O Padre nostro che ne' Cieli stai,
Non circonsritto, ma per più amore,
Che ai primi effetti di lassù tu hai, a
Laudato sia il tuo nome, e il tuo valore
Da ogni creatura, com'è degno
Di render grazie al tuo dolce vapore.
Vegna ver noi la pace del tuo regno,

* affetti Gg.*

3 i primi effetti: the first-created things, i.e. heaven and the angels.
us, for we towards it can naught of ourselves, if it comes not, with all our wit. As of their will Thy angels make sacrifice to Thee, chanting Hosanna, so may men do of theirs. Give this day to us the daily manna, without which through this rough desert backward he goes who most toils to go forward. And as we forgive to each man the evil which we have suffered, do Thou also graciously forgive, and not regard our merit. Our strength, which easily surrenders, put not Thou to proof with the old adversary, but deliver it from him, who so urges it. This last prayer,

Chè noi ad essa non potem da noi,
S' ella non vien, con tutto nostro ingegno.
Come del suo voler gli Angeli tuoi
Fan sacrificio a te, cantando Osanna,
Così facciano gli uomini de' suoi.
Dà oggi a noi la cotidiana manna,
Senza la qual per questo aspro diserto
A retro va chi più di gir s' affanna.
E come noi lo mal che avem sofferto
Perdoniamo a ciascuno, e tu perdona
Benigno, e non guardare al nostro merto.
Nostra virtù che di leggier s' adona,
Non spermentar con l' antico avversaro,
Ma libera da lui, che sì la sprona.
Quest' ultima preghiera, Signor caro,

"It may be better to take perdoniamo as subj. "as we would forgive."

adonare. Inf. vi. 34.
sprona, literally "spurs."
quest' ultima preghiera. Blane raises a question as to the meaning of this, and rather inclines to suppose that it refers only to the last line, thinking that the shades, though they cannot sin, are still dear Lord, no longer is made for us, for it needs not, but for those who have remained behind us." Thus praying for themselves and us good speed, these shades were all going under their load, like that which sometimes is felt in a dream, in diverse anguish, around and wearily up by the first ledge, purging away the darkness of the world. If there a good word is alway spoken for us, here what can be said and done for them, by those who have a good root to their will? Surely we ought to aid them to wash the stains

Già non si fa per noi, chè non bisogna;
Ma per color che dietro a noi restaro.
Così a sè e noi buona ramogna
Quell' ombre orando, andavan sotto il ponzo
Simile a quel che tal volta si sogna,
Disparmente angosciate tutte a tondo,
E lasse su per la prima cornice,
Purgando la caligine del mondo.
Se di là sempre ben per noi si dice,
Di quà che dire e far per lor si puote
Da quei ch' hanno al voler buona radice?
Ben si dee loro aiutare lavar le note,
Che portar quinci, sì che mondi e lievi liable to temptation. This seems far-fetched; and, besides, "di leggier s'adona," implies the possibility that those for whom the prayer is made may fall. There is no difficulty in the nostra. They say the prayer as they find it.

23 Già non = Lat. jam non. So xii. 46.
26 Disparmente. See x. 136.
33 "Die sich nämlich im stande der Gnade befinden, ohne die der Mensch das Gute weder zu wollen, noch zu vollbringen vermag." Philalethes, who compares iv. 134.
which they bore hence, so that clean and light they may issue to the starry circles. "Pray you—so may justice and pity soon disburthen you, that ye may be able to move the wing which may raise you according to your desire—show us on which hand is the shortest way towards the stair; and if there is more than one passage, teach us that one which falls least steeply: for this man who comes with me, through the burthen of the flesh of Adam, wherewith he is clad, is niggard, against his will, in mounting upward." Their words, which they returned to these, which he whom I was following had spoken, were not manifest from whom they came; but it was said: "Come to the right along the bank with us, and ye shall find the pass possible for a living person to Possano uscire alle stellate ruote.

Deh! se giustizia e pietà vi disgregvi
Tosto, sì che possiate muover l’ ala,
Che secondo il disio vostro vi levi;
Mostrate da qual mano inver la scala
Si va più corto; e se c’è più d’ un varco,
Quel ne insegnate, che men erto cala:
Che questi che vien meco, per l’ incarco
Della carne d’ Adamo, onde si veste,
Al montar su contra sua voglia è parco.
Le lor parole, che rendero a queste
Che dette avea colui cu’ io seguiva,
Non fur da cui venisser manifesto:
Ma fu detto: A man destra per la riva
Con noi venite, e troverete il passo

36 rote. So viii. 18.
45 parco. Parcus with inf. in this sense belongs to late Latin; e.g. Silius Italicus.
ascend. And if I were not hindered by the stone which quells my proud neck, whence it behoves me to bear my face low, this man who yet lives, and names not himself, would I gaze upon, to see if I knew him, and to make him pitiful to this burthen. I was Latin, and born of a great Tuscan: William Aldobrandeschi was my father; I know not if his name was ever with you. The ancient blood and the fair deeds of my ancestors made me so arrogant, that not thinking of the common mother, I had every man so Possibile a salir persona viva.

E s’io non fossi impedito dal sasso,
Che la cervice mia superba doma,
Onde portar conviemmi il viso basso:
Cotesti che ancor vive, e non si noma,
Guardere’ io, per veder s’io il conosco,
E per farlo pietoso a questa soma.
Io fui Latino, e nato d’ un gran Tosco:
Guglielmo Aldobrandeschi fu mio padre:
Non so se il nome suo giammai fu vosco.
L’ antico sangue e l’ opere leggiadre
De’ miei maggior mi fer sl arrogante,
Che non pensando alla comune madre,

56 The construction is remarkable, and can only be explained by regarding salir persona viva as one verb. See Diez (who, however, gives no exact parallel) iii. 231.

58 Latino = Italian. So xiii. 92. Inf. xxii. 65, and elsewhere. So Benv. in his note to xxvi. 140: “quasi dicat Latine m’abbellisce,” etc.

59 The Aldobrandeschi were counts of Sartifiore (vi. 111), and in a state of chronic hostility to the Sienese. Humbert, the speaker, was murdered in the year 1259, at his castle of Campagnatico, by some men of Siena. Campagnatico and Sartifiore are both in the modern province of Grosseto, formerly the Sienese Maremma.
deeply in despite that of it I died, as they of Siena know, and every child in Campagnatico knows it. I am Humbert; and not only to me did Pride work loss, for all my consorts has she drawn with her into disaster. And here it behoves that I carry this weight on her account, until God is satisfied, here among the dead, since I did it not among the living."

Listening, I bent my face downward, and one of them (not he who was speaking) twisted himself beneath the weight which hampers him; and saw me, and knew me, and called me, holding with labour his eyes fixed on me, who, all stooping, was going with them. "Oh," said I to

Ogni uomo ebbi in dispetto tanto avante,
Ch’ io ne morì’, come i Sanesi sanno,
E sallo in Campagnatico ogni fante.
Io sono Omberto: e non pure a me danno
Superbia fe’, che tutti i miei consorti
Ha ella tratti seco nel malanno:
E qui convien ch’io questo peso porti
Per lei, tanto che a Dio si soddisfaccia,
Poi ch’io nol fei tra’ vivi, qui tra’ morti.
Ascoltando chinai in giù la faccia:
Ed un di lor, non questi che parlava,
Si torse sotto il peso, che lo impaccia:
E videmi e conobbesi e chiamava,
Tenendo gli occhi con fatica fisi
A me, che tutto chin con loro andava.

67 fante. Bianchi thinks it means here "grown-up person;" but the word undoubtedly may mean "child," and this seems to give by far the most effective sense here.

78 Notice that Dante has to undergo a part at least of the punishment proper to this circle, and compare xiii. 136, 7; also xvi. 1-7, and xxvii. 49-51.
him, "art thou not Oderisi, the honour of Agubbio, and the honour of that art which is called illuminating in Paris?"
"Brother," said he, "more smile the parchments which Franco of Bologna pencils; the honour is now his wholly, and mine in part. Be sure I should not have been so courteous while I lived, for the great desire of excelling whereon my heart was intent. Of such pride here is

O, dissi lui, non se' tu Oderisi,
L' onor d' Agobbio, e l' onor di quell' arte 80
Che alluminare è chiamata in Parigi?
Frate, diss' egli, più ridon le carte,
Che pennelleggia Franco Bolognese:
L' onore è tutto or suo, e mio in parte.
Ben non sare' io stato si cortese
Mentre ch' io vissi, per lo gran disio
Dell' eccellenza, ove mio core intese.
Di tal superbia qui si paga il fio:

b diss' ei per più Cg.

79 Oderisi of Agubbio, and (82) Franco Bolognese, are mentioned by Vasari in his Life of Giotto, where this passage is quoted. He testifies from his own observation to the superiority of Franco.
81 alluminare, Fr. enluminer, whence Eng. limn. The Italian word is miniare, from minimum, red lead, whence "miniature." It may be remarked that Dante's rendering of the French word shows the pronunciation of Fr. en to have been the same then as now.
84 "My honour only remains as a part of his." Vellutello says that Franco was Oderisi's pupil; but there does not seem to be any evidence for this, and Vasari's statement that they were employed at the same time by the Pope (Boniface VIII.) is against it. "La mia fama appena si conserva e la sua è ora in capo."—Ott. It is hard not to suppose that the e mio in parte is a little natural touch; the old instinct of pride has not yet quite yielded to the purificatory discipline.
90 Cf. xxiii. 79.
paid the fee; and even here I should not be, if it were not that while I had the power to sin I turned to God. O vain glory of human powers, how little time does the green remain on its top, if it be not overtaken by uncouth ages! Cimabue thought to hold the field in painting; and now Giotto has the cry, so that he obscures the fame of

Ed ancor non sarei qui, se non fosse
Che, possendo peccar, mi volsi a Dio.
O vana gloria dell' umane posse,
Com' poco verde in su la cima dura,
Se non è giunta dall' etadi grosse!
Credette Cimabue nella pintura
Tener Io campo: ed ora ha Giotto il grido,
Si che la fama di colui oscura.

90

Some read il verde, but the art. seems unnecessary. Cf. Inf. xxiv. 6.
93 I.e. unless it happen to be followed by an age less cultivated. Giunta = sopraggiunta, as in Inf. xxii. 126.
94 95 It is not necessary to speak of Cimabue and Giotto. Villani does not mention the former, but he records Giotto's death (xi. 12) calling him "il più sovrano maestro stato in dipintura che si trovasse al suo tempo, e quegli che più trasse ogni figura e atti al naturale." He died Jan. 8, 1334. The date of Cimabue's death is given by Vasari as 1300. If so, it must have been later in the year than the supposed date of Dante's journey, as otherwise Dante would hardly have failed to introduce him, and, judging from the character assigned to him, in this very circle. See the commentator (Ottimo), on this passage, quoted by Vasari.
him. Thus has one Guido from the other taken the glory of the language; and perhaps he is born who will chase the one and the other from the nest. The rumour of the world is naught else than a breath of wind, which now comes hence and now comes thence, and changes name because it changes quarter. What fame wilt thou have more, if when it is old thou loose from thee thy

Così ha tolto l’ uno all’ altro Guido
La gloria della lingua: e forse è nato
Chi l’ uno e l’ altro caccerà di nido.
Non è il mondan romore altro ch’ un fiato
Di vento, ch’ or vien quinci, ed or vien quindi,
E muta nome, perché muta lato.
Che fama avrai tu più, se vecchia scindi

5 Che voce Gg. Cass. 12345.

97 Blanc takes the usual view that the allusion is to Guido Guinicelli (xxvi. 92; Conv. iv. 20; Vulg. El. i. 9; 15, where he is called maximus; ii. 5, etc.), and Guido Cavalcanti (Inf. x. 63, Vulg. El. i. 13, and elsewhere), Dante’s most intimate friend. The difficulty of this interpretation, as Philalethes has pointed out, lies in the fact that Guido Cavalcanti’s reputation does not seem to have been so great as that would imply. There seems more likelihood that Guittone d’Arezzo (xxiv. 56; xxvi. 124; Vulg. El. ii. 6) is the altro, and Guinicelli the uno. It is evident from the passages referred to that Dante considered Guittone a much overrated poet, and that he held Guinicelli in great esteem. The date of Guittone’s death is uncertain. Guinicelli died 1276, and Cavalcanti 1300. On the other side, however, must be set Petrarch’s mention of “i duo Guidi” (Tri. An. iv. 34). But Petrarch had not read Dante with much attention.

99 That Dante himself is indicated here can hardly be doubted.

flesh, than if thou hadst died before thou hadst left off thy child's prattle, ere a thousand years are past? which beside the eternal is a shorter space than is a movement of the eyelid beside the circle which in heaven turns the slowest. Of him who is taking the road so slowly in front of me, all Tuscany resounded, and now hardly in Siena do they whisper of him, whereof he was lord when the Florentine rage was destroyed, which was as proud at

Da te la carne, che se fossi morto
Innanzi che lasciassi il pappo e il dindi,\textsuperscript{6}
Pria che passin mill' anni? ch' è più corto
Spazio all' eterno, che un muover di ciglia,
Al cerchio che più tardi in cielo è torto.
Colui, che del cammin sì poco piglia
Dinanzi a me, Toscana sonò tutta,
Ed ora a pena in Siena sen pispiglia ;
Ond' era Sire, quando fu distrutta
La rabbia Fiorentina, che superba
Fu a quel tempo, sì com' ora è putta.

\textsuperscript{6} anzi che tu la Gg. Cass. 12345.

105 \textbf{Pappo} and \textbf{dindi}, childish for \textit{padre} and \textit{danari}. Cf. Inf. xxxii. 9.
106 The eighth, or circle of the fixed stars. Philalethes thinks \textit{più tardi è torto} means "for a given length of arc separates least from its tangent," but this seems unnecessarily abstruse. The astronomy of Dante's age put the revolution of the starry heaven, i.e. the cycle of the precession of the equinoxes, at 36,000 years. It is really 26,000.
109 I have followed Blanc and Bianchi. Philalethes renders "welcher hier vor mir vom Weg so wenig zurücklegt." It might be "who is taking the road such a short distance in front of me."
114 Blanc makes a difficulty about \textit{putta}, thinking the opposition not exact enough. But cf. vi. 78. The allusion is to the battle of Montaperti ; Villani (vi. 78), evidently with a reference to this passage, says, Guelf as he is, "così s'adonò la rabbia dell' ingrato e superbo popolo di Firenze."
that time as now it is vile. Your reputation is as hue of grass, which comes and goes, and he discoursers it, through whose power it came forth unripe from the ground.” And I to him: “Thy true tale puts in my heart a good humility, and brings low in me a great pride; but who is that of whom thou but now spakest?” “That is,” he answered, “Provenzano Salvani, and he is here, because he was presumptuous to bring Siena wholly into his hands. He has gone so, and goes without repose since he died. Such coin pays in satisfaction he who yonder is too daring.” And I:
“If that spirit which awaits, before it repents, the edge of La vostra nominanza è color d’ erba,

Che viene e va, e quei la discolora,
Per cui ell’ esce della terra acerba.
Ed io a lui; lo tuo ver dir m’ incuora
Buona umiltà, e gran tumor m’ appiani:
Ma chi è quei, di cui tu parlavi ora?

Quegli è, rispose, Provenzan Salvani,
Ed è qui, perchè fu presuntuoso
A recar Siena tutta alle sue mani.

Ito è così, e va senza riposo,
Poi che morì: cotal moneta rende
A soddisfar, chi è di la tropp’ oso.

Ed io: Se quello spirito che attende,
Pria che si penta, l’ orlo della vita, provenzano salvani was killed when the florentines, with the help of some of charles of anjou’s frenchmen, defeated a mixed force of sienese, germans, and spaniards at colle in valdelsa, june 11, 1269. see villani vii. 31, who says, “questo messere provenzano fu grande uomo in siena al suo tempo dopo la vittoria, ch’ ebbe a montaperti . . . . e era molto presuntuoso di sua volontà.”

life, tarries down there and ascends not hither, if kindly prayer aid it not, until so long a time has passed as it lived, how was the entrance allowed to him?" "When he was living in greatest glory," said he, "freely in the open place of Siena, all shame laid aside, he took his stand; and there, to draw his friend from punishment which he was enduring in the prison of Charles, he brought himself to tremble through every vein. More I will not say, and I know that I speak darkly; but little time will pass that thy neighbours shall so do, that thou shalt be able to expound it. This work cleared for him those boundaries."

Laggiù dimora, e quassù non ascende,
Se buona orazion lui non aita,
Prima che passi tempo, quanto visse,
Come fu la venuta a lui largita?
Quando vivea più glorioso, disse,
Liberamente nel campo di Siena,
Ogni vergogna deposta, s' affisse:
E lì, per trar l' amico suo di pena,
Che sostenea nella prigion di Carlo,
Si condusse a tremar per ogni vena.
Più non dirò, e scuro so che parlo:
Ma poco tempo andrà che i tuoi vicini
Faranno sì che tu potrai chiosarlo.
Quest' opera gli tolse quei confini.

130 See iv. 133.
133 sqq. The friend's name was Vigna. He was captured at the battle of Tagliacozzo, and held to ransom at 10,000 florins by Charles of Anjou. Provenzano raised the money by begging in the marketplace of Siena. (Ottimo, quoted by Philalethes: Landino.)
CANTO XII.

ARGUMENT.

The first circle continued. They come to a place where all the way is paved with stones whereon notable examples of pride and its fall are represented. At last they see an angel, who shows them the road by which to ascend to the second circle. The first mark disappears from Dante's forehead.

Paired, as oxen that go in the yoke, was I going with that burthened soul, so long as my sweet guardian suffered it. But when he said: "Leave him and pass on, for here it is good with the sail and with the oars, as much as each is able, to urge his boat," I made myself again as upright as

Di pari, come buoi che vanno a giogo,
M' andava io con quella anima carca,
Fin che il sofferse il dolce pedagogo.
Ma quando disse: Lascia lui e varca,
Chè qui è buon con la vela e co' remi,*
Quantunque pud ciascun, pinger sua barca:
Dritto sì, come andar vuolsi, rife' mi

* buon collati Gg. (alt.)

vuolsi. So xiii. 18, xxiii. 6, and elsewhere. The meaning is different from Lat. "sibi vult."
to walk requires, with my outward form; albeit my thoughts remained both bowed low and brought down. I had moved, and was following willingly the steps of my master, and both of us were already showing how agile we were; when he said to me: “Turn thy eyes downward; it will be good for thee, for easing of the way, to behold that whereon thy soles are laid.”

As when, that there be memory of them, above buried folk the mounds of earth bear designed that which they once were, whence tears are often shed there again, by reason of the prick of remembrance, which only to the pious gives the spur; so figured, but of better semblance,

Con la persona, avvegna che i pensieri
Mi rimanessero e chinati e scemi.
Io m’era mosso, e seguia volentieri
Del mio Maestro i passi, ed amendue
Già mostravam come eravam leggieri,
Quando mi disse: Volgi gli occhi in giue:
Buon ti sarà, per tranquillar la via,
Veder lo letto delle piante tue.
Come, perchè di lor memoria sia,
Sovr’ a’ sepolti le tombe terragne
Portan segnato quel ch’ elli eran pria:
Onde li molte volte se ne piagne,
Per la puntura della rimembranza,
Che solo a’ piii dà delle calcagne:
Sì vid’ io lì, ma di miglior sembianza,

b per alleggiar Ald. Land. Bi. Bl.

12 leggieri, as having nothing to carry, says Philalethes.
according to the craftsmanship, saw I there all that which for road projects forth from the mountain. I saw him who was created noble more than any other creature fall like lightning from heaven, on one side. I saw Briareus, pierced by the celestial dart, lie on the other side, weighed to the earth by the chill of death. I saw Thymtbreaus, I saw Pallas and Mars, armed yet around their father, gaze on the strewn limbs of the giants. I saw Nimrod at the foot of his

Secondo l’artificio, figurato
Quanto per via di fuor dal monte avanza.
Vedea colui che fu nobil creato
Più ch’altra creatura, giù dal Cielo
Folgoreggiando scendere da un lato.
Vedeva Briareo fitto dal telo
Celestial giacer dall’altra parte,
Grave alla terra per lo mortal gielo.
Vedea Timbreo, vedea Pallade e Marte,
Armati ancora intorno al padre loro,
Mirar le membra de’ giganti sparte.

23 secondo l’artificio. Bianchi and Fraticelli seem right in understanding this to refer to the Divine handiwork of the figures. Others take it as merely = “better as regards workmanship.”—figurato. The resemblance to the famous pavement of the Duomo of Siena which has struck many readers must be accidental, as that was probably not begun till after Dante’s death, and certainly could not have been seen by him. Bianchi remarks that the sculptures on the wall are instances of humility, while pride is figured on the ground only.

25 Colui. Luke x. 18. The other instances of defeated pride which follow are all familiar. It will be observed that they are taken alternately from sacred and profane story. Notice also the structure of the whole passage, broken into three groups of four, each distinguished by its initial word; the whole being as it were summed up in the lines 61-63.
great toil, as though bewildered, and the nations looking on who were proud with him in Shinar. O Niobe, with what weeping eyes saw I thee portrayed on the road, amid seven and seven of thy children slain! O Saul, how on thy own sword there appearedst thou dead on Gilboa, which thenceforth felt not rain nor dew! O foolish Arachne, so saw I thee, already half-spider, sad upon the tatters of the work which to thy hurt was wrought. O Rehoboam, here no longer appears thy image to threaten; but full of terror a chariot bears it away before another pursue it. The hard pavement showed moreover how Alcmaeon made appear

Vede a Nembrotto appiè del gran lavoro,
Quasi smarrito, e riguardar le genti
Che in Sennaar con lui superbi foro.
O Niobe, con che occhi dolenti
Vedeva io te segnata in su la strada
Tra sette e sette tuoi figliuoli spenti!
O Saul, come in su la propria spada
Quivi parevi morto in Gelboè,
Che poi non sentì pioggia, nè rugiada!
O folle Aragone, sì vedea io te,
Già mezza aragna, trista in su gli stracci
Dell’ opera che mal per te si fe!
O Roboam, già non par che minacci
Quivi il tuo segno: ma pien di spavento
Nel porta un carro prima che altri il cacci.
Mostrava ancora il duro pavimento
Come Almeone a sua madre fe’ caro

⁵⁰ So Vulg. El. i. 7.
⁵⁰ Alcmaeon slew his mother Eriphyle, because, persuaded by the bribe of a necklace, she had betrayed by Polynices the hiding-place of her husband Amphiaras, so that he went to Thebes and was killed.
costly to his mother her luckless adornment. It showed how his sons threw themselves on Sennacherib within the temple, and how they left that place when he was dead. It showed the ruin and the cruel example which Tomyris made when she said to Cyrus: "For blood thou hast thirsted, and with blood I fill thee." It showed how the Assyrians fled in rout after that Holofernes was dead, and also the remnants of the slaughter. I saw Troy in cinders and in pits; O Ilion, how base and vile showed thee the image which is there discerned! What master was ever of pencil and graving-tool to have portrayed the shadows and their

Parer lo sventurato adornamento.
Mostrava come i figli si gittaro
Sovra Sennacherib dentro dal tempio,
E come morto lui quivi lasciaro.
Mostrava la ruina e il crudo scempio
Che fe' Tamiri, quando disse a Ciro;
Sangue sitisti, ed io di sangue t'empio.
Mostrava come in rota si fuggiro
Gli Assiri, poi che fu morto Oloferne,
Ed anche le reliquie del martiro.

Vedeva Troia in cenere e in caverne:
O Ilion, come te basso e vile
Mostrava il segno che lì si discerne!
Qual di pennel fu maestro e di stile,

55 N.B. quivi as substantive: cf. xxi. 43.
60 le reliquie del martiro. Blanc and Philalethes take this to mean the corpse of Holofernes; Vellutello, Bianchi, and Fraticelli, those of the Assyrians.
64 pennel e stile; showing, as Blanc points out, that these pictures were engraved, not raised, as M. Doré has represented them. Phila-lineaments which there would make to wonder every subtile intellect? The dead appeared dead, and the living living; he who sees the truth sees not better than I all that I walked upon, so long as I went bowed. Now be proud, and forward with haughty visage, ye sons of Eve, and bow not your face so as to see your evil path.

More of the mountain had already been passed round by us, and of the sun’s road far more spent than the mind not at leisure estimated; when he who always went in front attentive began: “Raise upright thy head; there is no longer time to go bending thus. See there an angel who is

Che ritraesse l’ ombre e i tratti, ch’ ivi
Mirar farieno ogni ingegno sottile?
Morti li morti, e i vivi parean vivi:
Non vide me’ di me chi vide il vero,
Quant’ io calcai fin che chinato givi.
Or superbite, e via col viso altiero,
Figliuoli d’ Eva, e non chinate il volto,
Sì che veggiate il vostro mal sentiero.
Più era già per noi del monte volto,
E del cammin del Sole assai più speso,
Che non stimava l’ animo non scioltol;
Quando colui che sempre innanzi atteso
Andava, cominciò: Drizza la testa:
Non è più tempo da gir sì sospeso.

\[70\] gli atti \textit{Bi.}\] lethes seems to think that the meaning is, “Who could reproduce them?” but it clearly is, “What artist has there ever been good enough to do them?” For the constr. see Diez iii. 346. Lat. “Qualis fuit qui depingeret?”

Symbolically, humility must precede knowledge of the truth.

\[68, 69\] Cf. iv. 9, 12, sqq.
making ready to come toward us; see how the sixth hand-maid is returning from the service of the day. Adorn with reverence thy acts and thy face, so that it may please him to put us in the upward way; think that this day never dawns again." I was well used to his admonitions, above all not to lose time, so that in that matter he could not speak darkly to me. To us came the fair creature, clad in white, and in his face such as appears in its quivering gleam a star of morning. He spread his arms, and then spread his wings. He said: "Come: here are the steps hard by, and easily from henceforth one ascends." To this bidding

Vedi colà un’ Angel, che s’ appresta,
Per venir verso noi: vedi che torna
Dal servigio del di l’ ancella sesta.
Di riverenza gli atti e il viso adornata,
Si che il diletti lo inviarci in suso:
Pensa che questo di mai non raggiorna.
Io era ben del suo ammonir uso,
Pur di non perder tempo, si che in quella
Materia non potea parlarmi chiuso.
A noi venia la creatura bella
Bianco vestita, e nella faccia quale
Par tremolando mattutina stella.

• Le braccia aperse, ed indi aperse l’ ale:
Disse: Venite; qui son presso i gradi,
Ed agevolmente omai si sale.

81 It is now past noon. They have therefore been about an hour in this circle. See x. 14 sqq. It will be found that of no other circle, except the 7th, does the passage occupy so short a time. This is accounted for by the fact that in these they never stay to converse, but talk to the souls as they go.
come they very scant; O race of men, born to fly upward, why at a little wind fall ye so down? He led us where the rock was cut; there he beat his wings over my forehead; then he promised me my journey secure.

As on the right hand, to mount to the hill where stands

A questo invito vengon molto radi: *
O gente umana, per volar su nata,
Perchè a poco vento così cadi?
Menoci ove la roccia era tagliata:
Quivi mi battèo l' ali per la fronte,
Poi mi promise sicura l' andata.
Come a man destra, per salire al monte Dove siede la chiesa, che soggioga

* annunzio Gg. Cass. Ald. Land. etc.

94-96 Blanc, differing from most commentators, regards these lines as Dante's own remark, and not the continuation of the angel's words. Landino, however, says "le parole possono essere e dell' angelo e del poeta," the meaning of which is not very obvious. I have followed Blanc, as there is no other instance of any reflection of the kind being made by any of the angels who point out the way. As to the reading of l. 94, annunzio has perhaps most authority, but invito makes so much the best sense that I have followed Witte and Bianchi in adopting it. It may be said, too, that invito may easily have been read nunto, from which the step to annunzio is short; whereas no contrary process is likely to have taken place.

96 Blanc's interpretation of this line seems more questionable. Vento has been almost universally taken to mean the wind of vanglory, as in xi. 100; he, however, compares Matt. xiv. 30, as though want of faith were the cause of the frequent failures of men to rise on high. But looking to x. 125, as well as the passage referred to above, there seems little doubt that the usual is also the correct interpretation.

102 chiesa. Samminiato.
the church which above Rubaconte overhangs the well-guided city, one breaks the bold steepness of the ascent by the steps that were made at an age when the archives and the measure were safe; so grows gentler the slope which here falls very steep from the second circle; but on this hand and on that the lofty rock grazes. We turning there our bodies, Beati pauperes spiritu sang voices in such wise that speech would not tell it. O how different are these

La ben guidata sopra Rubaconte,
Si rompe del montar l'ardita foga,
Per le scalee, che si fero ad etade,
Ch' era sicuro il quaderno e la doga;
Così s' allenta la ripa che cade
Quivi ben ratta dall' altro girone:
Ma quinci e quindi l' alta pietra rade.
Noi volgendo ivi le nostre persone,
Beati pauperes spiritu, voci
Cantaron sì, che nol diria sermone.
Ahi quanto son diverse quelle foci

208 La ben guidata, ironically of Florence.
209 Rubaconte; the bridge now called Ponte alle Grazie. It was built in 1237, the first stone being laid by Messer Rubaconte da Mandello of Milan, then Podestà. Villani vi. 26.
210 il quaderno e la doga. In 1299 Messer Niccola Acciaiuoli and Messer Baldo d'Aguglione (Par. xvi. 56) abstracted from the public records a leaf containing the evidence of a disreputable transaction, in which they, together with the Podestà, had been engaged. At about the same time Messer Durante de' Chiaramontesi, being officer of the customs for salt, took away a stave (doga) from the standard measure, thus making it smaller (see Par. xvi. 105). Both the Acciaiuoli and the Chiaramontesi were Guelfs, and hence perhaps it is that Villani says nothing about these matters. It is to be noticed, however, that he makes no mention of the Podestà on the occasion of the founding of the walls of Florence in 1299. (Bk. viii. 31.) passages to those of hell, for here one enters through chants, there through fierce laments.

We were already mounting up by the holy stairs, and I seemed to myself far more light than on the level I had seemed before; wherefore I said: "Master, say what heavy thing has been lifted from me, that scarce any weariness is found by me in going?" He answered: "When the P's which still remain on thy forehead almost extinct, shall be, as one has been, wholly erased, thy feet will be so overcome of goodwill, that not only will they not feel weariness, but

Dall' infernali! chè quivi per canti
S' entra, e laggìù per lamenti feroci.
Già montavam su per li scaglion santi,
Ed esser mi parea troppo più lieve,
Che per lo pian non mi parea davanti:
Ond' io: Maestro, dì', qual cosa greve
Levata s' è da me, che nulla quasi
Per me fatica andando si riceve?
Rispose: Quando i P, che son rimasi
Ancor nel volto tuo presso che stinti,
Saranno, come l' un, del tutto rasi,
Fien li tuoi piè dal buon voler si vinti,
Che non pur non fatica sentiranno,

120 For this use of per equiv. to Latin ab with abl. see Diez iii. 162, and cf. iii. 75, xv. 8, etc. So Germ. durch

122 Because pride being gone, the original root of sin (according to the theologians) has been taken away, and the other sins tend to become extinct. See Aquinas S. T. ii. 2, Q. 162 (where he quotes Ecclus. x. 13), especially Art. 7. "Superbia causat gravitatem aliorum peccatorum," and "inter graviora peccata primum est superbia, sicut causa per quam alia peccata aggravantur."
it will be a delight to them to be urged upward." Then did I, as those who go with something on their head not known to them, save that the gestures of another make them suspect; wherefore the hand gives its aid to ascertain, and searches and finds, and fulfils that service which cannot be rendered by the sight; and with the fingers of my right spread out I found to be six only, the letters which he of the keys carved on me above the temples; looking whereat my leader smiled.

Ma fia diletto loro esser su pintValue
Allor fec' io come color, che vanno
Con cosa in capo non da lor saputa,
Se non che i cenni altrui sospicar fanno:
Perché la mano ad accertar s' aiuta,
E cerca e trova, e quell' ufficio adempie,
Che non si può fornir per la veduta:
E con le dita della destra scemple
TrovaI pur sei le lettere, che incise
Quel dalle chiavi a me sovra le tempie:
A che guardando il mio Duca sorrise.
CANTO XIII.

ARGUMENT.

The poets reach the second circle, wherein the sin of Envy is purged. At first they see no man, but presently they hear voices, calling to mind examples of the contrary virtue, and exhorting to it. Then they come upon the shades, who sit along the rock, clad in hair-shirts, and having their eyelids sewn up with iron thread. Dante talks with Sapia, a lady of Siena.

We were at the summit of the stair where a second time is cut back the mount which by its ascent frees any from ill; there a cornice binds around the steep, in like manner as the first, save that its arc more quickly bends. Shade

Nor eravamo al sommo della scala,
Ove secondamente si risega
Lo monte, che salendo altrui dismala.
Ivi così una cornice lega
Dintorno il poggio, come la primaia,
Se non che l’arco suo più tosto piega.

* rilegò Gg. 12345.

³ altrui, as in iv. 54; “any other,” i.e. than the subject of the verb, so “anyone.”

⁶ This phrase to some extent bears out Philalethes’ interpretation of xi. 108, q. v.
there is not, nor image that may appear, so bare appears the bank, so bare the way, with the livid hue of the rock. "If here one awaits folk to inquire," reasoned the Poet, "I fear that perhaps our selection may have too much delay." Then he directed his eyes fixedly to the sun; he made of his right side centre to his movement, and turned the left part of himself. "O sweet light, in whose confidence I enter by the new road, do thou conduct us," said he, "as

Ombra non gli è nè segno che si paia:
Par sl la ripa, e par sl la via 'schietta,
Col livido color della petraia.
Se qui per dimandar gente s' aspetta,
Ragionava il Poeta, io temo forse
Che troppo avrà d' indugio nostra eletta:
Poi fisamente al Sole gl' occhi porse:
Fece del destro lato al muover centro,
E la sinistra parte di sè torse.
O dolce lume, a cui fidanza io entro
Per lo nuovo cammin, tu ne conduci.

7 Ombra. Does this mean "shades" in the usual sense, or pictures? Landino is undecided; Philalethes leaves it open. Buti, Bianchi, and others take the latter view. Vellutello says "Cioè non era anima," and Blanc agrees in his Erklärungen (though taking the other view in his Dictionary), comparing x. 21. Besides, Virgil's next remark distinctly requires it, in order to be apposite. Segno = Lat. signum; the reason of the absence of these is plain, as the shades would be unable to see them.

9 Bianchi takes col to be contracted from come il; but this seems unnecessary.

9 livido; lividus in Latin is almost oftener used as = envious than in its literal sense.
one would be conducted herewithin; thou warmest the world, thou shinest over it; if other reason urges not to the contrary, thy rays ought to be always guides."

As much as one reckons here for a mile distance, so far were we already gone from there, in a short time, through the eagerness of our will. And towards us were heard, not however seen, to fly, spirits speaking courteous bidding to the table of love. The first voice that passed in its flight said in loud tone: Vinum non habent, and went repeating it behind us. And before it was wholly unheard through growing distant, another passed, crying: "I am

Dicea, come condur si vuol quinc'entro:
Tu scaldi il mondo, tu sov'esso luci:
S' altra ragione in contrario non pronta,
Esser den sempre li tuoi raggi duci.
Quanto di quà per un migliaio si conta,
Tanto di là noi eravam già iti
Con poco tempo, per la voglia pronta:
E verso noi volar furon sentiti,
Non però visti, spiriti, parlando
Alla mensa d' amor cortesi inviti.
La prima voce, che passò volando,
Vinum non habent, altamente disse,
E dietro a noi l' andò reiterando.
E prima che del tutto non s' udisse
Per allungarsi, un' altra: I' sono Oreste,

*b qui dentro Gg.
c cagione Ald. Land. Bi.*

26 però, as in vii. 55.
32 The words, of course, are those of Pylades, in the well-known story. Dante may have got it from Cic. de Am. § 24.
Orestes,” and also did not stay. “Oh,” said I, “Father, what voices are these?” And as I asked, lo, the third, saying: “Love them from whom ye have evil.” The good Master: “This circle scourges the sin of envy, and therefore are the lashes of the scourge wielded by love. The rein will have to be of the contrary sound; I think that thou wilt hear it, in my judgement, before thou reachest the passage of pardon. But fix thine eyes intently through the air, and thou wilt see folk sitting in front of us, and each one is seated along the cliff.” Then I opened my eyes more than before; I looked before me, and saw shades

Passò gridando, ed anche non s’affisse.
O, diss’io, Padre, che voci son queste?
E com’io dimandai, ecco la terza,
Dicendo: Amate, da cui male aveste,
Lo buon Maestro: Questo cinghio sferza.
La colpa della invidia, e però sono
Tratte da amor le corde della ferza.
Lo fren vuol esser del contrario suono:
Credo che l’udirai, per mio avviso;
Prima che giunghi al passo del perdono.
Ma ficca gli occhi per l’aere ben fisso,
E vedrai gente innanzi a noi sedersi,
E ciascun è lungo la grotta assiso.
Allora più che prima gli occhi apersi;
Guarda’ mi innanzi, e vidi ombre con manti

40 Vuol esser is nearly equivalent to sard, but the vuol is rather more than a mere auxiliary; it is almost exactly = Germ. muss. So Villani uses “voller esser presi,” “were going to be taken.” The use is noticed by Corticelli, who explains it as equivalent to essere per essere. Dante uses the figure of the rein and the spur (corresponding to the whip here) in Conv. iv. 26.
with cloaks not different from the colour of the rock. And after that we were a little more forward I heard them cry: "Mary, pray for us!" cry "Michael," and "Peter," and all the saints. I do not believe that there goes on the earth this day a man so hard, that he were not pricked by compassion for those whom I next saw; for when I had arrived so near them that their actions came clearly to me, the tears were drawn from my eyes for heavy grief. They appeared to me covered with common hair-cloth, and one was supporting another with his shoulder, and all were supported by the bank. Thus blind men, to whom sub-

Al color della pietra non diversi.
E poi che fiumo un poco più avanti,
Udi' gridar, Maria, ora per noi;
Gridar, Michele, e Pietro, e tutti i Santi.
Non credo, che per terra vada ancoi
Uomo si duro, che non fosse punto
Per compassion di quei ch'io vidi poi:
Chè quando fui sì presso di lor giunto,
Che gli atti loro a me venivan certi,
Per gli occhi fui di grave dolor munto.
Di vil cilicio mi parean coperti,
E l' un sofferia l' altro con la spalla,
E tutti dalla ripa eran sofferti.

43 Diversi al. So Inf. ix. 12. The construction is equivalent to the Latin with dative, which though the less usual is not unfrequent, especially in Horace. See Zumpt Gr. § 468.
44 Bianchi reads quel; but as no particular person is referred to, and quello is not often used as equivalent to cid, I have preferred quei.
45 munto: mulgere, not mungere. Diez i. 189.
stance is lacking, stand by the pardons to beg their need, and one lets his head fall on another, so that in others pity shortly is planted, not only through the sound of the words, but through the face which no less yearns. And as the Sun reaches not to those deprived [of sight], so to the shades in the place whereof I was but now speaking, light of Heaven will not bestow of itself: for in all of them a

Così li ciechi, a cui la roba falla,
Stanno ai perdoni a chieder lor bisogna
E l’unico capo sovra l’altro avvalla,
Perchè in altrui pietà tosto si pogna,
Non pur per lo sonar delle parole,
Ma per la vista, che non meno agogna.
E come agli orbi non approda il Sole,
Così all’ombre, dov’io parlava ora,^d
Luce del Ciel di sè largir non vuole:

^d ombre qui und’io Gg. om. ov’io Cass. qui vi ov’io parlo 45.
parlava 12. la v’io. W.

^61 a cui la roba falla. So Inf. xxiv. 7.
^62 perdoni, the church-doors and other places where notice of indulgences is given.
^63 approda. The word occurs Inf. xxi. 78, where, however, it seems rather to be connected with prodesse. Here the best interpretation would appear to be that which takes it as = arriva (proda = riva in vi. 85, and elsewhere); and with this Blanc (Erklärungen) finally agrees, though in his Dictionary he has preferred the meaning “profits,” which Philalethes also adopts. Bianchi, however, explains, “non arriva, non giunge a farsi vedere.” Ott. “non giova.”
^68 dov’io parlav’ora. Not, I think, quite as Bianchi: puts it, “del luogo nel quale,” for he has not yet spoken; nor as Philalethes, “die ich erwähnt,” for dove is not equivalent to delle quali. It is rather a compressed way of saying, “nel luogo del quale.”—ora, as in xi. 120. So French “tout-à-l’heure,” is used of time just past.
thread of iron bores the eyelid, and sews it in such wise as is done to a wild hawk because he remains not quiet. As I went I seemed to myself to be doing outrage in seeing others and not being seen, wherefore I turned to my sage Counsel. Well knew he what I, the silent, would say, and therefore he awaited not my demand, but said: "Speak, and be brief and clear." Virgil was going between me and that edge of the cornice, whence one may fall, because it is enringed with no border; on the other side me were the

Chè a tutte un fil di ferro il ciglio fora, 70
E cuce sì com' a sparvier selvaggio
Si fa, però che queto non dimora.
A me pareva andando fare oltraggio,
Vedendo altrui, non essendo veduto:
Perch' io mi volsi al mio consiglio saggio.
Ben sapev' ei, che volea dir lo muto;
E però non attese mia dimanda;
Ma disse: Parla, e sii breve ed arguto.
Virgilio mi venia da quella banda
Della cornice, onde cader si puote,
Perchè da nulla sponda s' inghirlanda:
Dall' altra parte m' eran le devote

* landa Gg.

79 Literally, "was going with regard to me in the direction of that border." This is one of the little explanations which Dante is so fond of giving to enable the reader to get his bearings.—venia, because Dante had gone a little in front. Da, as in iv. 57, etc. Diez iii. 149. Gg. reading landa, explains "i. e. planicie extrema."
81 sponda. Latin sponda is a bedstead, and more especially the side away from the wall, which would project a little beyond the mattress. (Hor. Epod. iii. 22). Here the meaning is that the path came to the very edge of the precipice.
devout shades, who through the horrible stitching were straining so that they bathed their cheeks. I turned to them and began: "O folk secure of seeing the light on high which alone your desire has in its care, so may grace quickly loosen the scum of your conscience in such wise that the stream of the mind may ascend clear through it, tell me (for it will be gracious and precious to me) if there is here among you a soul that is Latin; and perhaps to him it will be good, if I become known to him." "O my brother, each is citizen of a true city; but thou wouldest say, who

Ombre, che per l' orribile costura
Premevan sì, che bagnavan le gote.
Volsimi a loro, ed: O gente sicura,
Incominciai, di veder l' alto lume
Che il disio vostro solo ha in sua cura;
Se tosto grazia risolva le schiume
Di vostra coscienza, sì che chiaro
Per essa scenda della mente il fiume,

Ditemi (chè mi fia grazioso e caro)
S' anima è qui tra voi, che sia Latina:
E forse a lei sarà buon, s' io l' apparo.
O frate mio, ciascuna è cittadina
D' una vera città; ma tu vuoli dire,

85 sq. Cf. iii. 73-75.
88 se, as in ii. 16.
90 Blanc takes mente in the sense of "remembrance" (as in Par. ix. 104), with special reference to the effects of the water of Lethe.
92 Latino. So xi. 58.
93 lei, fem. because it represents anima. So vi. 61.
94 Cf. St. Augustine, "Qui vero cives sunt in populo Dei, ipsi sunt in terra peregrini." Comment. in Psal. cxviii.
lived as a pilgrim in Italy." This methought I heard by way of answer somewhat more in front than the place where I was standing, wherefore I let myself be heard still more that way. Among the others I saw a shade which in its face was expectant; and if any would say "How?"—it was raising its chin upward in fashion of one blind. "Spirit," said I, "that art quelling thyself in order to mount, if thou art that one which answered to me, make thyself known to me either by place or name." "I was of Siena," it answered, "and with these others I cleanse here my guilty life, weeping to Him, that He may grant Himself to us. Sage I was not, albeit I was called Sapia, Che vivesse in Italia peregrina.

Questo mi parve per risposta udire
Più innanzi alquanto, che lì dov'io stava;
Ond'io mi feci ancor più là sentire.
Tra l' altre vidi un' ombra, che aspettava
In vista; e se volesse alcun dir: Come?
Lo mento a guisa d' orbo in su levava.
Spirto, diss' io, che per salire ti dome,
Se tu se' quelli, che mi rispondesti,
Fammiti conto o per luogo o per nome.
Io fui Sanese, rispose, e con questi
Altri rimondo qui la vita ria,
Lagrimando a colui, che sè ne presti.
Savia non fui, avvegna che Sapía.

† Più lì. Ald. W.

99 Because the spirit could only thus know of his approach.
100 "Sapia fu gentildonna Sanese; ma in esilio viveva in Colle, e tanta invidia portava allo stato Sanese che essendo rotti i Sanesi non lontano da Colle, tanta letizia ne prese, che alzando gli occhi al cielo and I was far more glad of others’ harm than of my own fortune. And that thou mayest not think that I deceive thee, hear whether I was foolish as I tell thee. As the arch of my years was already turning downward, my fellow-citizens were, near to Colle, joined in the field with their adversaries, and I prayed God for that which was his will. There were they routed, and turned to the bitter passes of flight, and seeing the chace, I took pleasure beyond all other: so much that I upraised my daring face, crying to God: ‘Henceforth I

Fossi chiamata, e fui degli altrui danni
Piu lieta assai, che di ventura mia.
E perch’è tu non credi, ch’io t’inganni,
Odi se fui, com’ io ti dico, folle.
Già discendendo l’arco de’ miei anni,
Erano i cittadin miei presso a Colle
In campo giunti co’ loro avversari:
Ed io pregava Dio di quel ch’ei volle.
Rotti fur quivi, e volti negli amari
Passi di fuga, e veggendo la caccia,
Letizia presi ad ogni altri dispari:
Tanto, ch’io levai in su l’ardita faccia,
Gridando a Dio; Omai più non ti temo:

pregai 2 Ald. pregai Iddio W.

disse, Fammi hoggimai Iddio il peggio che tu puoi, che viverò e morirò contenta.” Landino. This was the battle in which Provenzano Salvani was slain (see xi. 121), and some of the early commentators say that Sapia was a relation of his. Philalethes thinks this improbable, because she was his enemy, but it is hard to see why one would have been incompatible with the other in those times.

114 For the comparison of human life to an arch, see Conv. iv. 23, where he puts the summit of the arch between the thirty-fifth and fortieth years.
fear thee no more,' as did the merle for a little fair weather. I wished for peace with God on the verge of my life; and not yet would my debt be reduced through penitence, if it were not that Peter Pettinagno had me in memory in his holy prayers, whom, of his charity, it grieved for me. But who art thou, that goest asking our conditions, and bearest thine eyes loosed, as I believe, and breathing talkest?" "My eyes," said I, "will yet be taken from me here; but for a little time, for small is the offence wrought by them through being turned with envy. Far greater is the fear

Come fe il merlo per poca bonaccia.
Pace volli con Dio in su lo stremo
Della mia vita: ed ancor non sarebbe
Lo mio dover per penitenza scemo,
Se ciò non fosse ch' a memoria m' ebbe
Pier Pettinagno in sue sante orazioni,
A cui di me per caritate increbbe.
Ma tu chi se', che nostre condizioni
Vai dimandando, e porti gli occhi sciolti,
Si come io creo, e spirando ragioni?
Gli occhi, diss' io, mi fierno ancor qui tolti,
Ma picciol tempo: chè poca è l' offesa
Fatta per esser con invidia volti.

132 Blanc and Philalethes, after Lombardi, state that in North Italy the last three days of January are known as "giorni del merlo." Sacchetti (Nov. cxlix.) quotes the proverb; "Più non ti curo Domine, che uscito son del verno."

136 I.e. "I should not have yet entered Purgatory," cf. iv. 133.

138 Piero Pettinagno (or Pettinaio as some read) is said to have been a hermit, of the Franciscan order, a Florentine by birth, but dwelling near Siena, and renowned for his piety and miracles. He is still, according to Philalethes, revered as a saint at Siena.

133 gli occhi; observe the allusion to the etymology of invidia.
whereby my soul is in suspense of the torment below, for already yonder burden weighs on me.” And she to me: “Who then has led thee up here among us, if thou thinkest to return below?” And I: “He here who is with me, and speaks no word; and I am alive; and therefore ask of me, elect spirit, if thou wilt that yonder I move for thee hereafter my mortal feet.” “Oh, this is so new a thing to hear,” she answered, “that it is a great sign that God loves thee, wherefore with thy prayer at some time help me. And I ask thee by that which thou most desirest, if ever thou treadest the land of Tuscany that thou surely make good

Troppa è più la paura, ond’ è sospesa
L’anima mia, dal tormento di sotto:
Che già lo incarco di laggiù mi pesa,
Ed ella a me: Chi t’ ha dunque condotto
Quassù tra noi, se giù ritornar credi?
Ed io: Costui, ch’ è meco, e non fa motto.

E vivo sono: e però mi richiedi,
Spírito eletto, se tu vuoi ch’ io muova
Di là per te ancor li mortai piedi

O questa è a udir si cosa nuova,1
Rispose, che gran segno è che Dio t’ ami:
Però col prego tuo talor mi giova:
E cheggioti per quel che tu più brami,
Se mai calchi la terra di Toscana,

1 Or questa. 2 W.

136-138 Dante’s pride seems to have been the point in his character which most struck his contemporaries. See Villani ix. 136: “Per lo suo savere fu alquanto presuntuoso e schifo e isdegnoso,” and sundry anecdotes to the same effect are preserved by Sacchetti and others.
again my fame among my kin. Thou wilt see them among that vain folk who have hope in Talamone, and will lose there more hope than in finding the Diana; but yet more will the admirals lose there."

Ch' a' miei propinqui tu ben mi rinfami.  150
Tu gli vedrai tra quella gente vana,
Che spera in Talamone, e perderagli
Più di speranza, ch' a trovar la Diana:
Ma più vi perderanno gli ammiragli.k

k metteranno Gg. 12345 Ald. W.

gente vana. Cf. Inf. xxix. 122.
Talamone is a small seaport at the south-west corner of the territory of Grosseto, in the Sienese Maremma, not far from the mouth of the Ombrone. The Sienese bought it in 1305 with the view of becoming a naval power, wherein they did not succeed. It was captured by the Sicilian fleet, under Don Peter (grandson of Peter III. of Aragon), acting on the side of the Emperor Lewis IV. against the Guelfs in 1328 (Villani x. 103).

Diana, a spring fabled to exist under Siena, in the search for which much time and money was spent. It, or another, was actually found in the course of the fourteenth century; see Vasari, lives of Agnolo and Agostino.

Because they lost their lives owing to the unhealthiness of the place.
CANTO XIV.

ARGUMENT.

Second circle continued. Dante talks with Guido del Duca and Rinier da Calboli, who lament the decline of virtue in the present age. They pass on and hear other voices, which recall examples of the sin of envy and its punishment.

"Who is this that circles our mountain before that death have given him power of flight, and opens and shuts his eyes at his will?" "I know not who he is, but I know that he is not alone. Ask thou of him that he draw nearer thee, and greet him sweetly, so that he may speak." Thus two

Chi è costui che il nostro monte cerchia
Prima che morte gli abbia dato il volo,
Ed apre gli occhi a sua voglia e coperchia?
Non so chi sia; ma so ch'ei non è solo:
Dimandal tu, che più gli t' avvicini,⁴
E dolcemente, sì che parli, accolto.
Così due spiriti, l' uno all' altro chini,

⁴ se più Gg.

⁶ accolto, accogiltò, accoito, accollo.
⁷ For the names of these two, see ll. 81, 88.
spirits, leaning the one against the other, were talking of me there to the right hand; then they turned their faces upward to speak to me, and one said: “O soul that fixed yet in the body goest thy way towards Heaven, in charity console us and tell us whence thou comest and who thou art, for thou makest us marvel so much at the grace thou hast, as that must needs do, which has never else happened.” And I: “Through midmost Tuscany takes its way a little stream, which rises in Falterona, and a hundred miles of course

Ragionavan di me ivi a man dritta:
Poi fer li visi, per dirmi, supini:
E disse l' uno; O anima, che fitta
Nel corpo ancora, inver lo Ciel ten vai,
Per carità ne consola, e ne ditta,
Onde vieni, e chi se': chè tu ne fai
Tanto maravigliar della tua grazia,
Quanto vuol cosa, che non fu più mai.

Ed io: Per mezza Toscana si spazia
Un fiumicel che nasce in Falterona,
E cento miglia di corso nol sazia.
Di sovr' esso rec' io questa persona;
Dirvi ch' io sia saria parlare indarno;
Che il nome mio ancor molto non suona.

8 a man dritta. Because Dante, talking to Sapia, had his face towards the mountain.
9 So xiii. 102. The gesture is very familiar in the blind.
10 fitto, fisso, fiso are all frequent. For the first form, see Diez i. 13.
18 sazia. N.B. the singular, as if it were, “corso di cento miglia.”
19 Di, not, I think, “from,” as Philalethes and Bianchi take it, but as in “di quella costa,” Par. xi. 49, and “di là,” “di quà.” Reco as in xxvi. 60, xxxiii. 78.
sate it not. Upon its banks I bear this body. To tell you who I am would be to speak in vain, for as yet my name makes no great sound.” “If I well pierce thy meaning with my understanding,” answered me then he who first spoke, “thou talkest of Arno.” And the other said to him: “Why did he hide the name of that river just as a man does of horrible things?” And the shade which was asked of this delivered itself thus: “I know not, but worthy it is surely that the name of such a vale perish, for, from its source (where so teems the lofty mountain, whence Pelorum is cut, that in few places does it pass beyond that mark)

Se ben lo intendimento tuo accarnò
Con lo intelletto, allora mi rispose
Quei che prima dicea, tu parli d’ Arno.\footnote{dicea \textit{pria} 1234, \textit{d. prima Cass. diceva \textit{pria} W.}}
E l’ altro disse a lui; Perchè nascose
Questi il vocabol di quella riviera,
Pur com’ uom fa dell’ orribili cose?
E l’ ombra che di ciò dimandata era,
Si sdebitò così: Non so, ma degno
Ben’ è, che il nome di tal valle pera:
Chè dal principio suo (dov’ è si pregno
L’ alpestro monte, ond’ è tranco Peloro,
Che in pochi luoghi passa oltra quel segno)
Infin là ’ve si rende per ristora

\footnote{\textit{accarno}, properly “pierce the flesh.” Cf. “\textit{accuorare}.”}
\footnote{\textit{si pregno}. Both the Arno and the Tiber are among the streams which rise in the neighbourhood of Monte Falterona. Compare with this passage the description of the course of the Mincio, \textit{Inf. xx.}}
\footnote{\textit{monte}, the Apennine, from which Pelorum is cut off by the Strait of Messina.}
even to that spot where it renders itself for repayment of what the heaven dries up of the sea, whence the rivers get that which goes with them, virtue is shunned for an enemy by all men just like a serpent, either through mishap of the place or through evil custom which pricks them on, wherefore the inhabiters of the unhappy vale have so changed their nature that it seems as though Circe had had them in feeding. Among foul hogs, more worthy of galls than of any food made for the use of men, it first directs its miserable path. Next it finds curs, as it comes lower,

Di quel che il ciel della marina asciuga,
Ond’ hanno i fiumi ciò, che va con loro,
Virtù così per nimica si fuga
Da tutti, come bussia, o per sventura
Del luogo, o per mal uso che gli fruga:
Ond’ hanno si mutata lor natura
Gli abitator della misera valle,
Che par che Circe gli avesse in pastura.
Tra brutti porci, più degni di galle,
Che d’ altro cibo fatto in umano uso,
Dirizza prima il suo povero calle.
Botoli truova poi venendo giuso
Ringhiosi più che non chiede lor possa,

43 porci, the men of the Casentino; probably with especial reference to the great family known as the Conti Guidi, lords of Romena (Inf.
xxx. 73), and Porciano, to which latter name there is perhaps an allusion. See Philalethes here, and to Inf. xvi. 39.
43 galle for ghiande says Blanc: but surely it is contemptuous,
"fit not even for acorns, only galls."
44 altro. See xxxii. 39.
46-48 botoli, the Aretines, who were in a state of almost constant feud with Florence, and for a long time more or less in subjection to it.
The Arno, as will be seen on the map, flows south-east almost to Arezzo, and then makes a great sweep away to the north-west.
snarling more than their power demands, and at them in disdain it turns aside its muzzle. It goes its way downward, and in proportion as it grows greater so much the more does the accursed and ill-fated fosse find, out of dogs, wolves made. Then, having descended through more hollow basins, it finds the foxes, so full of fraud that they have no fear of a wit that may forestall them. Nor will I leave speaking for all that another hear me; and good will it be for this man if hereafter he bethinks him of that which a spirit of truth unfolds to me. I see thy grandson, who becomes

Ed a lor disdegnosa torce il muso,
Vassi caggendo, e quanto ella più ingrossa,
  Tanto più truova di can farsi lupi 50
La maladetta e sventurata fossa,
Discesa poi per più pelaghi cupi,
  Truova le volpi si piene di froda,
Che non temono ingegno che le occupi.
Nè lascerò di dir, perch’ altri m’ oda:
  E buon sarà a costui, se ancor s’ ammenta
Di ciò che vero spirto mi disnoda.
Io veggio tuo nipote, che diventa

50 lupi, the Florentines, of course with especial allusion, as in Par.
xxv. 6 and elsewhere, to the Guelfs.
51 pelaghi cupi. Philalethes points out the topographical accuracy of all this description of the Arno’s course. Those who have travelled along the railway from Pisa to Florence will remember the deep hollows through which the river makes its way between those towns.
53 volpi, the Pisans.
57 vero spirto. It seems hardly necessary to hold with Buti that a direct angelic communication is here implied.
58 Fulcieri da Calvoli was Podestà of Florence in 1302. Villani (viii. 59) calls him “uomo feroce e crudele,” and describes the destruction wrought by him among the White party. It is curious, as a chaser of those wolves upon the bank of the savage stream and scares them all; he sells their flesh while it is alive; afterward slays them like a beast grown old; many of life he deprives and himself of honour. Bloody he issues from the sorry wood; he leaves it such that, for a thousand years hence, it replants itself not in its first state.” As at the

Cacciatore di quei lupi in su la riva
Del fiero fiume, e tutti gli sgomenta.
Vende la carne loro, essendo viva:
Poscia gli ancide come antica belva:
Molti di vita, e sè di pregio priva.
Sanguinoso esce della’ trista selva,
Lasciala tal, che di qui a mill’ anni
Nello stato primaio non si rinselva.

bearing on the question of Dante's place in the political parties of the time, to observe that although it was the White Guelfs, generally supposed to have been his own party, whom Fulcieri so harried, they are here classed all alike as “wolves.” It was, indeed, this treatment that bound them closely to the Ghibelines, and henceforward Villani always speaks of “i bianchi e ghibellini.” But the classing of Dante crudely as a Ghibeline is extremely misleading. See Par. vi. 105.

It is difficult to understand the meaning of this line. The treatment of Donato Alberti, to which Philalethes thinks it may refer, does not seem much to the point, for though it might be said that he was exposed in the shambles, he can hardly be said to have been sold. Nor is Landino's explanation, “per prezzo ucciderà molti,” much more satisfactory. Villani, at all events, gives no hint that Fulcieri had any inducement, save party feeling, to act as he did. The allusion is probably to some transaction known at the time and since forgotten.

Blanc finds a difficulty, which does not seem to have struck the Italian commentators, in the use of belva to signify a domestic animal.

selva. So Inf. i. 2.

See Villani l.c. and ch. 68 for the misery which succeeded Fulcieri’s year of office.
announcement of doleful losses the face of him who listens is troubled, from what quarter soever the danger may assail him, so saw I the other soul that was remaining turned to hear, grow troubled and become sad, after it had considered the word within itself. The speech of the one and the visage of the other made me desirous to know their names, and I made demand of them mingled with prayer. Wherefore the spirit which first spoke to me began again: "Thou wilt that I humble myself in doing to thee that thou

Come all’ annunzio de’ dogliosi danni
Si turba il viso di colui che ascolta,
Da qual che parte il periglio lo assanni:
Così vid’ io l’ altr’ anima, che volta
Stava ad udir, turbarsi e farsi trista,
Poi ch’ ebbe la parola a sè raccolta.
Lo dir dell’ una e dell’ altra la vista
Mi fe’ voglioso di saper lor nomi,
E dimandà ne fei con prieghi mista.
Perchè lo spirto, che di pria parlòmi,
Ricominciò: Tu vuoi ch’ io mi deduca
Nel fare a te ciò che tu far non vuoi mi.

cfuturi danni Ald. Bi. d di colui, che ascolta Da qualche Ald.

67 The reading futuri gives, as Scart. says, a much better sense; but it lacks authority.
69 qual che = Fr. quel que, or as it would now be written quelque . . . que. See Littré under both these phrases. It is not quite the same as qualunque.
69 assannare, properly, to attack with the teeth, as Inf. xxx. 29.
71 Stava = little more than era. Cf. Inf. vii. 109, where, however, it may be rendered "I was standing," which it cannot here, as the shades are sitting. For this use, see Diez iii. p. 188.
wilt not do to me; but seeing that God wills that His grace should in thee' shine out so great, I will not be sparing toward thee; wherefore know that I am Guido del Duca. My blood was so on fire with envy that, if thou hadst seen a man grow prosperous, thou wouldst have seen me with livid hue overspread. Of my sowing such is the straw I reap. O race of men, why place ye your hearts there where refusal of companionship is necessary? This is

Ma da che Dio in te vuol che traluca
Tanta sua grazia, non ti sarò scarso:
Però sappi ch'io son Guido del Duca.
Fu il sangue mio d' invidia sì riarso,
Che se veduto avessi uom farsi lieto,
Visto m' avresti di livore sparso.
Di mia semenza cotal paglia mieto.
O gente umana, perchè poni il cuore
 Là 'v' è mestier di consorto divieto?

81 Of Guido del Duca even Philalethes has been able to discover no more than that he was of Brettinoro, or Bertinoro, a town in Romagna, near Forli. From Villani viii. 93, it would appear to have been a Ghibeline town, for we find the Guelfs besieging it in 1307.

83 I prefer to take avessi as the second person. The grammatical connection of the sentence is thereby more satisfactory and the idea more vivid. Besides Guido would not surely say "s'io avessi veduto," but "s'io vidi," or at least "vedessi."

87 A difficult line to render exactly. It must be remembered that the order of the words is "ove divieto di consorto è mestier;" mestier, as in i. 92 and elsewhere, standing by itself. Philalethes has "wobei zulässig nicht Gemeinschaft." Blanc quotes Boëthius (Con. Phil. ii. 5): "O angustas inopesque divitias quas nec habere totos pluribus licet, et ad quemlibet sine ceterorum paupertate non veniunt."

88 Philalethes thinks there is some reason for identifying the person here named with a Rinier of Calvoli, who was Podesta of Parma in 1252. The family were Guelfs of the straitest sect, and were in 1306
Rinier, this is the prize and the honour of the house of Calboli, where no man has since made himself heir of his worth. And not his blood only, between the Po and the mountain, and the sea and the Reno, has been stripped bare of the good sought for earnest and for pastime, for all within these boundaries is so full of poisonous stocks, that late would they hereafter be diminished by cultivation. Where is the

Questi è Rinier: questi è il pregio e l' onore
Della casa da Calboli, ove nullo
Fatto s' è reda poi del suo valore.
E non pur lo suo sangue è fatto brullo:
Tra il Pò e il monte, e la marina e il Reno,
Del ben richiesto al vero ed al trastullo;
Chè dentro a questi termini è ripieno
Di venenosi sterpi, si che tardi
Per coltivare omai verrebbero meno.
Ov' è il buon Lizio, ed Arrigo Manardi,

-driven out of Brettinoro, where they possessed a castle, by the inhabitants, aided by the men of Forli. Here then it would seem, just as in Canto vii., Dante brings men who on earth were of opposite parties into close and affectionate intimacy.

92 That is, in Romagna. The Reno flows a little west of Bologna (Inf. xviii. 61), and presently turns to the south-east, and becomes connected with the southern mouths of the Po. Monte = the Apennine.

97 These and the following names are all those of men or families who shared in the struggle of Guelfs and Ghibelines for supremacy in Romagna, which lasted through all the last quarter of the thirteenth century. Lizio da Valbona appears in 1274 in connection with Rinier da Calvoli as on the side of the Guelfs against Guido da Montefeltro and the Ghibelines, and with Ricciardo da Manardi of Brettinoro, under more peaceful circumstances, in Bocc. Dec. v. 4. See the notes of Philalethes to this passage, and at the end of Inf. xxvii., where he gives a general sketch of the affairs of Romagna during this period, good Lizio, and Henry Manardi, Peter Traversaro, and Guy of Carpigna? O men of Romagna turned to bastards! When does a Fabbro take rank again in Bologna, when in Faenza a Bernardin son of Fosco, noble scion of humble plant?

Pier Traversaro, e Guido di Carpigna?
O Romagnuoli tornati in bastardi!
Quando in Bologna un Fabbro si ralligna?
Quando in Faenza un Bernardin di Fosco,
Verga gentil di picciola gramigna?
Non ti maravigliar, s’io piango, Tosco, in which several of these names will be found. Of the rest the early commentators mostly tell us little more than we might gather from the text, viz. that they were noble and courteous gentlemen, given to liberality. In Dec. v. 8 (the well-known story which Dryden has adapted as "Theodore and Honoria") the hero is Anastagio and the heroine of the Traversaro family.

There is some difficulty, for want of an accurate knowledge of the meaning of the allusion, in deciding whether these three lines are to be taken interrogatively, or as an explanation of the previous bastardi ("bastards," when men of no birth take rank among nobles), in which latter case there should be only a comma at the end of l. 99, and l. 102 must be taken as ironical. Landino, though he omits, perhaps by a printer’s error, the note of interrogation, follows the earliest commentators in adopting the former way, and says that a certain Lambertaccio Fabbro (Big Lambert the Blacksmith) was the founder of the great Ghibeline family of Bologna, the Lambertazzi. Of Bernardino, Philalethes finds that he was the son of Fosco a peasant, whom for his virtue and wise talk the nobles used often to visit. At the same time the learned and royal commentator renders it, "O der Bastardbrut Romagna’s Weil in Bologn’ ein Fabbro, in Faenza Treibt neue Wurzeln," etc., and therefore seems to understand the words as used in dispraise. I prefer to follow his notes rather than his translation. Blance also supports this interpretation, which certainly seems more in agreement with the rest of the passage. It is not want of birth but of manners which Guido is reprehending in his countrymen.
Marvel not if I weep, Tuscan, when I remember, with Guy of Prata, Ugolin d’Azzo who lived with us; Frederick Tignoso and his company, the house of Traversaro, and the Anastagi (both the one race and the other is void of heirs), the dames and the cavaliers, the toils and the repose; which love and courtesy put in our will, there where the hearts are now become so wicked. O Brettinoro, why fleest thou not away; since thy family is departed, and much folk, to be free from guilt? Well does Bagnacavallo, that it bears no

Quando rimembro con Guido da Prata
Ugolin d’Azzo, che vivette nosco:
Federigo Tignoso e sua brigata:
La casa Traversara, e gli Anastagi
(E l’ una gente e l’ altra è diretata),
Le donne e i cavalier, gli affanni e gli agi,
Che ne invogliava amore e cortesia,
Là dove i cuor son fatti si malvagi.
O Brettinoro, chè non fuggi via,
Poichè gita se n’ è la tua famiglia,
E molta gente per non esser ria?
Ben fa Bagnacaval, che non rifiglia; diretata. Ald. Land.

105 Some read vosco; but the whole passage relates to persons who belonged to Romagna. Ugolino d’Azzo is said to have been of the Tuscan family of the Ubaldini, and domiciled in Faenza. He was cousin to Archbishop Roger of Inf. xxxiii.
108 diretata is from low Latin deherito.
109 Stolen by Ariosto (O. F. i. 1), and spoilt in the stealing.
115, 116 The Counts of Bagnacavallo do not as a matter of fact seem to have become extinct before the end of the fourteenth century. Those of Castrocaro were Ghibelines; those of Conio, Guelfs.
more sons, and ill does Castrocaro, and worse Conio, that it sets itself any more to beget such counts. Well will the Pagani do, from the time that their Demon shall go his way; but yet not in such wise that a pure record of them should ever remain. O Ugolin of the Fantoli, secure is thy name, since no longer is one expected who can by going astray make it obscure. But go thy way now, Tuscan, for now it

E mal fa Castrocaro, e peggio Conio,
Che di figliar tai conti più s’impiglia.
Ben faranno i Pagan, da che il Demonio
Lor sen girà: ma non però che puro
Giammai rimanga d’essi testimonio.\footnote{di se Cg.}

O Ugolin de’ Fantoli, sicuro
È il nome tuo, da che più non s’aspetta
Chi far lo possa tralignando oscuro.
Ma va’ via, Tosco, omai, ch’or mi diletta
Troppò di pianger più che di parlare,

\footnote{The Pagani were citizens of Imola. Their Demon is the famous partisan-leader Maghinardo Pagani da Susinana, the “leoncel dal nido bianco” of Inf. xxvii. 50. Villani (vii. 149) says of him: “fu uno grande e savio tiranno, savio fu di guerra, e bene avventuroso in più battaglie, e al suo tempo fece grandi cose. Ghibellino era di sua nazione e in sue opere, ma co’ Fiorentini era guelfo, e nimico di tutti loro nimici, guelfi o ghibellini che fossono.” He was left when a child to the guardianship of the city of Florence. He took Imola from the Bolognese in 1296 (Villani viii. 16) and remained lord of the city till his death in 1302.}

\footnote{Ugolino de’ Fantoli, of Faenza, died about 1292.}

\footnote{tralignando. Par. xii. 90, xvi. 58. So Villani xii. 44. Cf. ralligna in l. 100.}
delights me far more to weep than to talk, so has our converse constrained my mind."

We knew that those dear souls were hearing us go; therefore in silence we made ourselves confident of the road. After we were alone as we went forward, appeared, like lightning when it cleaves the air, a voice which came to meet us, saying: "Whosoever findeth me shall slay me;" and it fled, like thunder which melts away if suddenly the cloud bursts. When from it our hearing had truce, lo the

Si m’ha nostra ragion la mente stretta. 8
Noi sapevam che quell’ anime care
Ci sentivano andar : però tacendo
Facevan noi del cammin confidare.
Poi fummo fatti soli procedendo,
Folgoré parve, quando l’ aer fende,
Voce che giunse di contra, dicendo :
Anciderammi qualunque m’apprendè ;
E fuggio, come tuon che si dilegua,
Se subito la nuvola scendese.
Come da lei l’ udir nostro ebbe tregua ;
Ed ecco l’ altra con si gran fracasso,

8 vostra 2 Ald. Land. region Bi.

126 nostra ragion. Cf. xxii. 130. If we read vostra, the sense must be "your," i.e. "human reason," which breeds compassion. It cannot be "your talk," because only Dante has spoken. Bianchi’s reading, nostra region, "the thought of our country," is not unsatisfactory, if supported by MSS.

128, 129 Because they knew that if they went wrong, the souls would perceive it and warn them.

133 Genesis iv. 14.
other with so great uproar that it seemed a thundering which should quickly follow: "I am Aglauros, that became a stone." And then, to draw close to the Poet, I made my pace backward and not forward.

Already was the air quiet on every hand, and he said to me: "That was the hard bit, which ought to hold the man within his bound. But ye take the bait, so that the hook of the old adversary draws you to him; and therefore little avails bridle or recall. The heaven calls you, and turns around you, showing you its eternal beauties; and your eye gazes only on the earth; wherefore he who discerns all scourges you."

Che somigliò tonar che tosto segua:
Io sono Aglauro che divenni sasso;
Ed allor per istringermi al poeta,
Indietro feci e non innanzi il passo.
Già era l' aura d' ogni parte queta:
Ed ei mi disse: Quel fu il duro camo,
Che dovria l' uom tener dentro a sua meta.
Ma voi prendete l' esca, si che l' amo.
Dell' antico avversario a sè vi tira;
E però poco val freno o richiamo.
Chiamavi il cielo, e intorno vi si gira,
Mostrandovi le sue bellezze eterne,
E l' occhio vostro pure a terra mira;

Onde vi batte chi tutto discerne.

139 See Ovid Metam. ii. 800 sqq. 143 Cf. xiii. 40. 148 Cf. xix. 62.
CANTO XV.

ARGUMENT.

They come to an angel of wonderful brightness, who shows them the way to the next circle. Virgil explains a doubt which has arisen in Dante's mind. They enter the third circle, where the sin of anger is purged. Dante falls into a trance, or ecstasy, and beholds as in a vision certain events, whereby the contrary virtue is set forth. He comes to himself, and of a sudden they are involved in a thick smoke.

As much as, between the end of the third hour and the beginning of the day, appears of the sphere which ever sports in fashion of a child, so much by this appeared to remain to the Sun of his course towards the evening;

Quanto tra l' ultimar dell' ora terza,
   E il principio del dì par della spera,
   Che sempre a guisa di fanciullo scherza,
   Tanto pareva già inver la sera
   Essere al Sol del suo corso rimaso;
   Vespero là, e qui mezza notte era.

1-6 I.e. it was three hours past noon in Purgatory, wherefore it must have been three hours after midnight at Jerusalem, and just midnight at Florence. Spera is the sphere in which the sun is fixed, which is said to sport, because its great circle—the ecliptic—is always rising or falling, to appearance, in the sky.
there it was late afternoon, and here midnight. And the rays were striking us on mid-nose, because the mount had been so circled by us, that we were already going straight towards the sunset; when I felt the splendour weigh down my forehead far more than before, and the things not understood were an astonishment to me. Wherefore I raised my hand towards the top of my eyebrows, and made to myself the sun-shade which pares away the superfluity of vision. As when from water or from the mirror the ray rises toward the opposite part, mounting up in the manner

E i raggi ne ferian per mezzo il naso,
Perch'è per noi girato era si il monte,
Che già dritti andavamo inver l' occaso;
Quando io sentì' a me gravar la fronte
Allo splendore assai più che di prima,
E stupor m' eran le cose non conte:
Ond' io levai le mani inver la cima
Delle mie ciglia, e fecimi il solecchio,
Che del soverchio visibile lima.

Come quando dall' acqua o dallo specchio
Salta lo raggio all' opposita parte,
Salendo su per lo modo parecchio
A quel che scende, e tanto si diparte

8,9 See note to iii. 89. With this use of per cf. that of durch in German.
10,11 senti' allo splendore. See note to viii. 106.
15 soverchio visibile. Cf. viii. 36. It is the αἰσθητὸν ὑπερβολή of Aristotle; and Philalethes's "das dicht das von oben eintief," is clearly a mistranslation. Cf. xvii. 58.
18 parecchio, Fr. pareil, has in Italian quite gone out of use in this its primary sense.
similar to that in which it descends, and parts itself equally far from the fall of the plummet in an equal space, as experiment and art show; so I seemed to be struck by light reflected there in front of me, wherefore my sight was quick to fly. "What is that, sweet father," said I, "from which I cannot screen my face so much as may avail me, and it appears to be in motion toward us?" "Marvel not if still the family of Heaven dazzle thee," he answered me; "it is a messenger who comes to bid one mount. Soon will it be that to see these will not be grievous to thee, but

Dal cader della pietra in iguall tratta,
Si come mostra esperienza e arte:
Così mi parve da luce rifiatta
Ivi dinanzi a me esser percosso:
Perché a fuggir la mia vista fu ratta.
Che è quel, dolce Padre, a che non posso
Schermar lo viso tanto che mi vaglia,
Diss'io, e pare inver noi esser mosso?
Non ti maravigliar se ancor t'abbaglia
La famiglia del Cielo, a me rispose:
Messo è che viene ad invitar ch'uom saglia.
Tosto sarà che a veder queste cose
Non ti fia grave, ma fieti diletto, a pietra lacqua Gg.

20 I.e. at a given distance from the reflecting surface the incident and reflected rays are equidistant from the perpendicular.

21 esperienza ed arte, a kind of ἐν διά δυνάμει, hence the singular verb. "Arte, la prospettiva."—Land.

22 Note that here as elsewhere (Par. xix. 6, etc.) Dante uses rifrangere where we should say "reflect." It is the translation of Gr. ἄναξαλασθάι, which seems to have been used in both senses.

30 uom, as in iv. 27.
will be to thee a delight, as much as nature has disposed thee to feel."

After we were come to the blessed angel, with joyful voice he said: "Enter here," to a stair far less steep than the others. We were mounting, having already departed thence; and Beati misericordes was chanted behind us, and "Rejoice thou that conquerest."

My master and I, solitary, were both going upward, and I was thinking as I went to gain profit in his words; and I directed myself to him, thus inquiring: "What meant the spirit from Romagna, making mention both of a refusal and companionship?" Wherefore he to me: "Of his own Quanto natura a sentir ti dispose.

Poi giunti fummo all' Angel benedetto,
Con lieta voce disse: Intrate quinci
Ad un scalço vie men che gli altri eretto.
Noi montavamo, già partiti linci, b
E Beati misericordes fue
Cantato retro, e: Godi tu che vinci.
Lo mio Maestro ed io soli amendue
Suso andavamo, ed io pensava, andando,
Prode acquistar nelle parole sue:
E dirizza’ mi a lui sì dimandando,
Che volle dir lo spirto di Romagna,
E divieto e consorto menzionando?
Perch’ egli a me: Di sua maggior magagna
Conosce il danno: e però non s’ ammiri,

b Noi eravamo Cass.; montavam g. p. di linci Gg. 124; da linci W.

45 See xiv. 87.
greatest blemish he recognises the bane; and therefore let there be no wonder if he reproves it, that he may the less mourn for it. Because your desires come to their point where through companionship a part is lost, envy moves the bellows to your sighs. But if the love of the highest sphere moves your desire upward, you would not have that fear at the heart; because the more there are by whom ‘Ours’ is said there, so much the more of good each possesses, and

Se ne riprende, perché men sen piagna.
Perché s’ appuntano i vostri desiri,
Dove per compagnia parte si scema:
Invidia muove il mantaco a’ sospiri.
Ma se l’ amor della spera suprema
Torcesse in suso il desiderio vostro,
Non vi sarebbe al petto quella tema:
Chè per quanti si dice più li nostro,
Tanto possiede più di ben ciascuno,

"nostri Gg.

\textit{per quanto Cass.; quantunque Gg.; Perche quanto Ald. Land. Bi.}

\textit{appuntarsi} is more frequent in the Paradise. See, for example, ix. 118, xxvi. 7, and (cf. with this passage) xxix. 12.

\textit{Invidia nihil aliud est nisi animi labes quaedam et deprivatio, qua quispiam alieno bono cam ob causam maeret, quod per id bonum suum commodum impediri vel diminui arbitretur."—Sum. Theol. ii. 2, Q. 36.}

\textit{Landino and Philalethes quote Augustine De Civ. Dei. xv. 15:}

"Nullo modo fit minor accedente socio possessio bonitatis quam tanto latius, quanto concordius possidet individua sociorum charitas." The former also quotes Boëthius: "Omne bonum in commune deductum pulcrius elucescit." There can be little doubt that W. is correct in reading \textit{quanti}, as is shown by the expansion given in line 73 to the doctrine stated here. "Quanto sunt plures possessores ibi in caelo" is the comment in Gg.
the more of charity burns in that cloister." "I am more fasting from being satisfied," said I, "than if I had before held my peace, and I unite more doubt in my mind. How can it be that a good distributed makes the more possessors richer in it, than if it is possessed by a few?" And he to me: "Because thou dost fix thy mind only on earthly things, of true light thou gatherest darkness. That infinite and ineffable good which is on high, so runs to love as a

E più di caritate arde in quel chiostro.
Io son d' esser contento più digiuno,
Diss' io, che se mi fosse pria tacuito:
E più di dubbio nella mente aduno.

60

Com' esser puote che un ben distributo
I più possedior faccia più ricchi
Di sè, che se da pochi è posseduto?

Ed egli a me: Perocchè tu rificchi
La mente pure alle cose terrene,
Di vera luce tenebre dispicchi.

Quello infinito ed ineffabil bene,
Che lassù è, così corre ad amore,
Come a lucido corpo raggio viene.

57 chiostro; cf. xxvi. 128.
59 Cf. Conv. iii. 7: "Certu corpi per molta chiarità di diafano avere in se mista, tosto che 'l Sole gli vede diventano tanto luminosi, che per multiplicamento di luce in quelli appena discernibile è il loro aspetto, e rendono agli altri di sè grande splendore; siccome l'oro, e alcuna pietra . . . . Certi altri sono tanto senza diafano, che quasi poco della luce ricevono; siccome la terra. Così la bontà di Dio è rincontra altrimenti dalle sustanze separate . . . e altrimenti dall' umana natura," etc. The whole of this passage should be read, and compared with iv. 20, where he quotes Aristotle De Anima ii. 2: δοκεὶ γὰρ ἐν τῷ πάσχοντι καὶ διαπεμένῳ ἡ τῶν ποιητικῶν ὑπάρχειν ἐνέργεια.
ray comes to a shining body. It gives as much of ardour as it finds: so that in proportion as charity extends, increases upon it the eternal worth. And the more the folk who comprehend each other on high the more there are to

Tanto si dà, quanto truova d' ardore:
Sì che quantunque carità si stende,
Cresce sovr' essa l' eterno valore.
E quanta gente più lassù s' intende,
Più v' è da bene amare, e più vi s' ama,

73 s'intende, is the only reading that has any authority here, though, considering the resemblance between c and t in MSS. something may be said for s'incende, which Blanc gives from Perazzini, and seems to prefer. It is, however, little more than a repetition of the idea in line 70. Vellutello, reading as it would seem al su, and Fraticelli lassuso, explain it, the one (whom Cary and Longfellow have followed) by “intende e aspira a quel bene di la su,” the other by “e intenta nella visione di Dio.” Landino has in his text (ed. 1578) lo su, and explains “non minuisce la gloria nell’ anime in cielo per esservene più,” which looks as if he took gente to be the object and s'intende in the sense of “stretches itself over,” “contains,” lo su being heaven. Witte has “Je mehr der Herzen droben sich begegnet.” Blanc (in his Voc. Dant.) “Essere compreso.” Scartazzini follows Fanfani, who says that intendersi was used in the sense of innamorarsi; but this would make più vi s' ama superfluous. Philalethes, Lombardi, and Bianchi adopt the interpretation which I have followed, and which seems on the whole the best, if we are to keep the usual reading. Of this, however, I do not feel sure. A comparison with Par. xxvi. 28 sqq, suggests a reading l'intende, “comprehends it,” i.e. the bene, and looking to the small difference between long s and l in MSS. this seems at least worth considering. But a reference to Aquinas, S. T. ii. 2, Q. xxiv. Art. 5: “Charitas augetur gradus intensionis susciendo,” suggests a better emendation, viz. to read “E in quanta gente,” taking caritate as the subject of s'intende. The alteration would merely be from et to a: and the words would mean: “The more there are among whom charity increases, the more they obtain of the one true good, the love of God.”
love rightly, and the more love there is, and as a mirror one renders it to another. And if my reasoning abates not thy hunger, thou wilt see Beatrice, and she will fully take away from thee this and each other craving. Only use diligence, that quickly may be erased, as are already the two, the five wounds which are closed by means of sorrowing."

As I was wishing to say "Thou dost appease me," I saw that I was come upon the next gallery, so that my wandering eyes made me hold my peace. There meseemed that I was drawn of a sudden into an ecstatic vision, and saw in

E come specchio l’ uno all’ altro rende.
E se la mia ragion non ti disfama,
Vedrai Beatrice: ed ella pienamente
Ti torrà questa e ciascun’ altra brama.
Procaccia pur, che tosto sieno spente,
Come son già le due, le cinque piaghe,
Che si richiudon per esser dolente.
Com’ io voleva dicer: Tu m’ appaghe;
Vidimi giunto in su l’ altro gironc,
Sì che tacer mi fer le luci vaghe.
Ivi mi parve in una visione
Estatica di subito esser tratto,
E vedere in un tempio più persone:
Ed una donna in su l’ entrar, con atto

83 Observe that here, as in the last circle, the bodily eyes are rendered useless, by the nature of the punishment, and the examples of the sin and its contrary virtue need therefore again to be presented to the mind by some other means than through their aid. Here the method adopted is that of trance, or vision, and perhaps with special reference to the way in which anger deprives a man temporarily of the power to observe external things, and not merely, as Ginguéné says, "pour varier les moyens."
a temple sundry persons; and a dame in the entry, with sweet gesture of a mother, said: “My son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? Behold thy father and I were seeking thee sorrowing.” And as here she held her peace, that which first appeared disappeared. Then appeared to me another, with those waters fallen on her cheeks which grief distils, when it arises from great despite toward another; and she said: “If thou art lord of the town, of whose name there was such strife among the gods, and whence all knowledge sparkles forth, avenge thee of those daring arms which embraced our daughter, O Pisistratus.” And the lord appeared to me kindly and gently to answer her with

Dolce di madre dicir; Figliuol mio,
Perchè hai tu così verso noi fatto?
Ecco dolenti lo tuo padre ed io.
Ti cercavamo. E come qui si tacque,
Ciò che pareva prima disparìo.
Indi m' apparve un’ altra con quell’ acque
Giù per le gote, che il dolor distilla
Quando per gran dispetto in altrui nacque:
E dir: Se tu se’ sire della villa,
Del cui nome ne’ Dei fu tanta lite,
Ed onde ogni scienza disfavailla,
Vendica te di quelle braccia ardite,
Che abbracciar nostra figlia, o Pisistrato:
E il signor mi parea benigno e mite
Risponder lei con viso temperato;
Che farem noi a chi mal ne disira,

98 Ovid Met. vi. 70. Quoted also from Varro by St. Augustine, Civ. Dei. xviii. 9: “de lite deorum suorum nomen accepit.” The story here referred to is told by Valerius Maximus, v. 1, § 2, in the second part.
temperate mien: "What should we do to whoso wishes us ill, if he who loves us is condemned by us?" Afterward I saw folk kindled into fire of rage slay with stones a youth, loudly crying to each other only: "Kill, kill;" and him I saw bow himself in death which was weighing him down already toward the earth, but of his eyes he made ever gates to the heaven; praying to the Lord on high in so great strife that He would pardon his persecutors, with that aspect which sets loose pity. When my mind turned outward again to the things which are true externally to it, I recognised my not false errors. My leader who could see me do as does a man who loosens himself from his sleep, said: "What

Se quei che ci ama è per noi condannato?
Poi vidi genti accese in fuoco d'ira,
Con pietre un giovinetto ancider, forte
Gridando a sè pur; Martira martira:
E lui vedea chinarsi per la morte,
Che l' aggravava già, inver la terra,
Ma degli occhi facea sempre al Ciel porte,
Orando all' alto Sire in tanta guerra,
Che perdonasse a' suoi persecutori,
Con quell' aspetto che pietà disserra.
Quando l' anima mia tornò di fuori
Alle cose, che son fuor di lei vere,
Io riconobbi i miei non falsi errori.
Lo Duca mio, che mi potea vedere
Far sì com' uom che dal sonno si slega,
Disse: Che hai, che non ti puoi tenere?

114 che pietà disserra. I have followed the interpretation of Bianchi, Fraticelli, and Blanc. Philalethes refers it to Divine as well as human pity. Vellutello has "che in apparenza di fuori manifesta pietà," taking pietà = piety.
ails thee, that thou canst not contain thyself? Nay, thou hast come more than half a league veiling thy eyes, and with thy legs entangled, in guise of one whom wine or sleep bows down.” “O my sweet father, if thou listest to me, I will tell thee,” said I, “that which appeared to me when my legs were so seized from me.” And he: “If thou hadst a hundred masks over thy face, thy meditations would not be closed to me, however small. That which thou sawest was in order that thou shouldest not excuse thyself from opening thy heart to the waters of peace, which are poured abroad from the eternal fount. I did not ask, What ails thee? for the reason that he does, who looks only with the eye that sees not when the body lies inanimate; but I asked

Ma se' venuto più che mezza lega
   Velando gli occhi, e con le gambe avvolte,
   A guisa di cui vino o sonno piega,
O dolce Padre mio, se tu m' ascolte,
   Io ti dirò, diss' io, ciò che mi apparve
Quando le gambe mi furon sì tolte.

Ed ei: Se tu avessi cento larve:*
   Sovra la faccia, non mi sarien chiuse
Le tue cogitazion, quantunque parve.
Cioè che vesti fu, perché non scuse
   D' aprir lo cuore all' acque della pace,
   Che dall' eterno fonte son diffuse.'
Non dimandai, Che hai, per quel che face
   Chi guarda pur con l' occhio che non vede,
Quando disanimato il corpo giace:
Ma dimandai per darti forza al piede:

*e mille Gg. 23.
' dischiuse Gg.
to give force to thy feet; so behoves it to urge the lazy, slow to use their wakefulness when it returns.”

We were going through the evening, gazing onward as far as the eyes could reach, against the late and shining rays, and beheld little by little a smoke draw toward us, as the night obscure; nor from that was there place to withdraw oneself; this took from us our eyes and the pure air.

Così frugar convien si pigri, lenti
Ad usar lor vigilia quando riede.
Noi andavam per lo vespero attenti
Oltre, quanto potean gli occhi allungarsi,
Contra i raggi serotini e lucenti:
Ed ecco a poco a poco un fumo farsi
Verso di noi, come la notte oscuro,
Nè da quello era luogo da cansarsi:
Questo ne tolse gli occhi, e l’ aer puro.

342 Dante can hardly have been aware of the etymological connection between φυμός and fumus.
CANTO XVI.

ARGUMENT.

Third circle continued. They go forward in the smoke, seeing nothing: but by their voices become aware that the spirits are at hand. Dante talks with Marco Lombardo, who speaks to him of the free-will and responsibility of man, and the need for two governments, the spiritual and the temporal; by the confounding of which great evils have befallen the world.

GLOOM of hell, and of a night bereft of every planet under a poor sky, darkened all that it can be by cloud, made not to my sight so thick a veil as that smoke which there covered us, nor of so harsh a texture to feel; for it suffered

BUIO d’ inferno, e di notte privata
D’ ogni pianeta sotto pover cielo,
Quant’ esser può di nuvol tenebrata,
Non fece al viso mio sì grosso velo,
Come quel fumo ch’ ivi ci coprese,
Nè a sentir di così aspro pelo:

6 pelo is hard to render here. The idea is of a veil of some coarse and harsh material, from which threads stick out like hairs. Philalethes has only “dem Gefühl so rauh.”
not the eye to stay open; wherefore my learned and faithful escort moved to my side, and offered me his shoulder. Just as a blind man goes behind his guide in order not to stray, and not to stumble against aught that can harm him or maybe slay him, I was going through the bitter and foul air listening to my leader, who said only: "See that thou be not cut off from me." I began to hear voices, and each appeared to be praying for peace and mercy to the Lamb of God who takes away sins. Only Agnus Dei were their preludes; one word in all there was, and one measure, so that there appeared among them all concord.

"Are those spirits, master, which I hear?" said I. And Chè l' occhio stare aperto non sofferse:

Onde la Scorta mia saputa e fida
Mi s' accostò, e l' omero m' offerse.
Si come cieco va dietro a sua guida
Per non smarrirsi, e per non dar di cozzo
In cosa che il molesti, o forse ancida,
M' andava io per l' aere amaro e sozzo,
Ascoltando il mio Duca, che diceva
Pur: Guarda, chè da me tu non sie mozzo.
Io sentia voci, e ciascuna pareva
Pregar per pace e per misericordia,
L' Agnel di Dio, che le peccata leva.
Pure Agnus Dei eran le loro esordia:
Una parola in tutte era ed un modo,
Sì che parea tra esse ogni concordia.
Quei sono spiriti, Maestro, ch' io odo?

11 dar di cozzo; 50 di piglio, i. 49, di morso, xviii. 132, di becco, xxiii. 30.
he to me: "Thou apprehendest truly, and of anger they go loosing the knot."

"Now who art thou who cleavest our smoke, and talkest of us only, as if thou still dividest thy time by calends?"
Thus by one voice was spoken. Wherefore my master said to me: "Answer, and ask if from this point one goes upward." And I: "O creature that art purifying thyself, to return fair to Him who made thee, thou shalt hear a marvel if thou follow me." "I will follow thee as far as is allowed me," he answered; "and if smoke lets us not see, hearing will hold us joined in place thereof." Then I began:

Diss' io: Ed egli a me: Tu vero apprendi,
E d' iracondia van solvendo il nodo.
Or tu chi se', che il nostro fumo fendi,
E dì noi parli pur come se tu
Partissi ancor lo tempo per calendi?
Così per una voce detto fue:
Onde il Maestro mio disse: Rispondi,
E dimanda se quinci si va sue.
30
Ed io: O creatura, che ti mondi,
Per tornar bella a colui, che ti fece,
Maraviglia udirai se mi secondi.
Io ti seguirò quanto mi lece,
Rispose: e se veder fumo non lascia,
L' udir ci terrà giunti in quella vece.

parli pur, "only talkest about us, without being one of us."
Or perhaps better, with Landino, "pur come," "just as if" (as in xiv.
"with no admixture of anything else," from which idea those of "only" and "exactly" are easily obtained.

in quella vece = in vece di quello; as Inf. xxi. 10.
"With that burthen which death unlooses, I go my way upward, and I have come here through the weariness of Hell; and if God has in His grace revealed to me so much that He wills that I should see His court, in a fashion wholly apart from modern use, conceal not from me who thou wast before thy death, but tell it me; and tell me if I go aright to the passage, and let thy words be our escort."

"A Lombard was I, and I was called Mark; I had know-

Allora incominciai: Con quella fascia,
Che la morte dissolve, men'vo suso;
E venni qui per la infernale ambascia:
E se Dio m'ha in sua grazia rinchiuso
Tanto che vuol ch'io veggia la sua corte
Per modo tutto fuor del modern' uso,
Non mi celar chi fosti anzi la morte,
Ma delli, e dimmi s'io vo bene al varco,
E tu parole fien le nostre sorte.
Lombardo fui, e fui chiamato Marco:

\(a\) per refrenar l'amb. Cass.

\(b\) rinchiuso Cg. 124.

---

40 Bianchi, in common with most other commentators, explains \textit{rinchiuso} by \textit{ricevuto}. Except, however, in the passages, Par. ix. 40 and 102, \textit{richiedere} is never used in D.C. without the idea of reclosing. I have, therefore, preferred to take it here in the sense of Lat. \textit{recludere}; a rendering which is also borne out by comparison with Par. xv. 30.

42 Cf. Inf. ii. 32.

46 This Marco is said to have been a Venetian by birth, so that Lombardo must either be used generally for Italian, or, as seems more probable, have been a surname, most likely given on account of his family being by origin Lombard. Boccaccio and others say that he was "di ca' (casa) Lombardi dà Vinegia," and Vellutello adds that in his time the family still existed. The commentators for the most ledge of the world, and I loved that virtue towards the which each man has now unbent his bow. Thou goest rightly for mounting upwards." Thus he answered; and he added: "I pray that for me thou pray, when thou art on high." And I to him: "Faithfully I bind me to thee, to do that which thou askest of me; but I am bursting inwardly with a doubt, if I have not an explanation thereof.

Del mondo seppi, e quel valore amai; c
Al quale ha or ciascun disteso l'arco.
Per montar su dirittamente vai.
Così rispose; e soggiunse: Io ti prego,
Che per me preghi quando su sarai.
Ed io a lui: Per fede mi ti lego
Di far ciò che mi chiedi: ma io scoppio
Dentro da un dubbio, s' io non me ne spiego.

"voler Gg. Cass. (the editors of which call it "lesione unica").

part identify him with the Marco Lombardo whose repartee to Count Ugolino is recorded by Villani, vii. 121. It may be remarked that Sismondi in narrating this incident, which he seems to have got from some source other than Villani, makes Ugolino address him with "Eh bien, lombard;" and in the Cento Nov. Antiche the name is written with l.

47 quel valore is taken by some to mean the virtue of liberality, but it is hard to see the appropriateness of the allusion here, or why it should not mean "worth" generally.

48 This metaphor, in which purpose is represented by the figure of the bow, which sends forth the arrow of action, is a favourite one with Dante. Cf. vi. 131. So Boccaccio Day x. Nov. 7, at end.

51 Blanc finds a difficulty in understanding su to mean "in heaven," because there is nothing elsewhere in D.C. to show that Dante's prayer will be more efficacious when he is there; nor does a reference to xxvi. 127, satisfy him. But surely this is a somewhat pedantic objection; and su must have the same meaning here as in line 49.

54 me spiego seems to have a force not unlike that of the Greek middle voice.
First it was simple, and now it is made twofold in thy speech, which makes sure to me, here and elsewhere, that whereunto I couple it. The world is indeed as desert of all virtue as thou proclaims to me, and pregnant of wickedness, and overspread with it; but I pray that thou wouldst point out to me the occasion, so that I may see it, and that I may show it to others; for one places it in the stars, and another here below.” A deep sigh, which grief strained to a groan, he first sent forth, and then began: “Brother, the world is blind, and surely thou comest from it. Ye who

Prima era scempio, ed ora è fatto doppio
Nella sentenzia tua, che mi fa certo
Qui ed altrove, quello ov’ io l’ accoppio.
Lo mondo è ben così tutto diserto
D’ ogni virtute, come tu mi suone,
E di malizia gravido e covero:
Ma prego che m’ additi la cagione,
Si ch’ io la vegga, e ch’ io la mostri altrui:
Chè nel ciel uno, ed un quaggiù la pone.
Alto sospir, che duolo strinse in hui,
Mise fuor prima: e poi cominciò: Frate,

\[\textit{d mi diti (altered from dici) Gg.}\]

55 His doubt is as to the cause of the present corruption of the world, of the existence of which he now feels certain, having heard it mentioned by two people.

63 cielo, i.e. in the movements of the various heavens, or as we should say, the influence of the stars. I have avoided “heaven,” which would be ambiguous in English. For the properties of the “heavens,” and their connection with the sciences, see Conv. ii. 14, and for the scholastic doctrine on the subject, Sum. Theol. i. Q. 115, Art. 3-5. In regard to the influence of the “heavens” upon man’s free-will, St. Thomas holds that “voluntas non potest nisi indirecte a corporibus caelestibus moveri.”—S. T. ii. 1. Q. 9, Art. 5.
live refer every occasion only upward to the stars, just as if they moved all with them of necessity. If it were thus, free judgement in you would be destroyed, and it were not justice to have for good joy, and for evil woe. The stars give beginning to your movements; I say not all, but granted that I say it, light is given you to good and ill, and free-will which, if weariness lasts in its first battles with the stars, afterwards wins in the whole, if it is well nurtured. To a greater power and a better nature ye are free subjects, and that creates the mind in you, which the stars have not

Lo mondo è cieco, e tu vien ben da lui.
Voi che vivete ogni cagion recate
Pur suso al ciel così, come se tutto è
Movesse seco di necessitate.
Se così fosse, in voi fora distrutto
L libero arbitrio, e non fora giustizia
Per ben letizia, e per male aver lutto.
Lo cielo i vostri movimenti inizia,
Non dico tutti : ma posto ch’ io il dica,
Lume v’ è dato a bene ed a malizia:
E libero voler, che, se fatica:
Nelle prime battaglie col ciel dura,
Poi vince tutto, se ben si notrica.
A maggior forza ed a miglior natura
Liberi soggiacete, e quella cria
La mente in voi, che il ciel non ha in sua cura.

70 seq. Cf. Boëthius, Cons. Phil. v. 3 : Frustra enim bonis malisque praemia poenaeve proponuntur, quae nullus meruit liber ac voluntarius motus animorum.
76 There is another reading, s’affatica. If this be followed che is the subject to dura. But this is not so good.
76 vince tutto. So “vince ogni battaglia,” Inf. xxiv. 53.
in their care. Wherefore, if the present world goes astray, in you is the occasion, in you let it be sought; and I will be to thee now a true scout in the matter. From His hand who loves it before it is, in guise of a girl that plays weeping and laughing, comes forth the soul in its simplicity, which knows nothing save that, set in motion by a glad Maker, it turns willingly to that which gives it pleasure. Of a small good at first it perceives the savour; here it deceives itself, and runs after that, if guide or bit turns not its affection. Whence it

Però se il mondo presente disvia,
In voi è la cagione, in voi si cheggia:
Ed io te ne sarò o vera spia.
Esce di mano a lui, che la vagheggia
Prima che sia, a guisa di fanciulla
Che piangendo e ridendo pargoleggia,
L' anima semplicita, che sa nulla,
Salvo che, mossa da lieto fattore,
Volentier torna a ciò che la trastulla.

Di picciol bene in pria sente sapore;
Quivi s' inganna, e dietro ad esso corre,
Se guida o fren non torce il suo amore.

89, 90 Because "ciascuno effetto ritenga della natura della sua cagione." Conv. iii. 2.
91 lieto; cf. xxv. 70.
92 Cf. Convito iv. 12: "E perché le sua conoscenza prima è imperfetta, per non essere sperta, nè dottrinata, piccoli beni le paiono grandi." The whole of this passage should be read.
93 Eth. Nic. iii. 4. τούς πολλοὺς ἡ ἀπάτη διὰ τὴν ἡδονὴν ζουκε γίγνεοθαι.
94 Cf. De Mon. iii. 15: "nisi homines, tanquam equi, sua bestialitate vagantes, in chamo et fraeno compescerentur in via. Propter quod opus fuit homini duplici directivo, secundum duplicem finem: scilicet summo pontifice, qui secundum revelata humanum genus perduceret ad vitam aeternam; et imperatore qui secundum philosophica documenta genus humanum ad temporalem felicitatem dirigeret."
behoved to lay down laws for a bit; it behoved to have a king who should discern of the true city at least the tower.
The laws are there, but who puts hand to them? No man;
because the shepherd who goes before may chew the cud, but has not the hooves divided. Wherefore the folk who see their guide strike only at that good whereof they are

Onde convenne legge per fren porre:
Convenne rege aver, che discernesse
Della vera cittade almen la torre.
Le leggi son, ma chi pon mano ad esse?
Nullo: perocchè il pastor che precede
Ruminar può, ma non ha l' unghie fesse.
Perchè la gente, che sua guida vede

96 La vera cittade. Cf. xiii. 95. There is implied here the mystical connection which Dante is fond of suggesting between the empire with its capital on earth, and the heavenly city "onde Cristo è Romano" (xxxii. 102).
97 Cf. vi. 96.
99 "Sie können viel schwatzen meint er über die Decretalen, aber sie selbst üben keine Tugend."—Philalethes. Bianchi takes a similar view. The older commentators, however, give a different interpretation. Thus Landino: "Prima bisogna che ogni governatore consideri bene ed intendi quello che ha a fare. Dopo pone l'unghie fesse per la discrezione, la qual distingue le cose temporali dalle spirituali." It is, however, simpler to suppose that Dante was thinking of St.
Augustine's exposition: "Fissa enim ungula ad mores ruminatio vero ad sapientiam pertinet. Quare ad mores fissa ungula? Quia difficile labitur. Ruminatio autem ad sapientiae doctrinam quomodo pertinet?
Quia dixit Scriptura, Thesaurus desiderabilis requiescit in ore sapientis, vir autem stultus glutit illum"—Serm. 149. St. Thomas (S. T. ii. 1.
Q. 102, Art. 6) is less clear on the point, but says that the division of the hoof signifies among other things "distinctionem duarum naturarum in Christo, vel discretionem boni et mali." With the former cf. Dante's use of reggimenti in line 128, and in xxi. 123.
greedy, feed themselves on that, and seek no further. Well canst thou see that evil guidance is the occasion that has made the world guilty, and not nature having become corrupt in you. Rome, that made the good world, was wont to have two suns, that showed the one and the other road, of the world and of God. The one has put out the other, and the sword is joined with the crook; and the one

Pur a quel ben ferire ond’ ella è ghiotta,
Di quel si pasce, e più oltre non chiede.
Ben puoi veder che la mala condotta
È la cagion che il mondo ha fatto reo,
E non natura che in voi sia corrotta.
Soleva Roma, che il buon mondo feo,
Duo Soli aver, che l’ una e l’ alta strada
Facean vedere, e del mondo e di Deo.
L’ un l’ altro ha spento, ed è giunta la spada
Col pasturale, e l’ uno e l’ altro insieme

103 ferire: of a bird of prey; as in ix. 25.
105 One is rather tempted to suggest “quella mal condotta,” sc. the Church, comp. “la ben guidata,” xii. 102.
106 Cf. De Mon. ii. 6: “Romanus populus, subjiciendo sibi orbem, bonum publicum intendit,” and Conv. iv. 5, “Nè l’mondo non fu mai nè sarà si perfettamente disposto, come allora che alla voce d’ un solo principe del roman popolo e comandatore fu ordinato.”
107 duo Soli. Evidently with an allusion to the argument for the inferiority of the temporal power drawn from the analogy of the Sun and the Moon, which he discusses and dismisses—De Mon. iii. 4. Similarly in lines 109, 110, the allusion in “la spada col pastorale” is to the argument from the two swords, disposed of in § 9 of the same treatise. There are, he would seem to imply, two suns, not a sun and a moon; not two swords, but sword and pastoral staff. Cf. Bryce, Holy Roman Empire, ch. xv. ad fin.
109, 110 There would seem to be an allusion here to the action of Boniface VIII. after the victory of Albert of Hapsburg over Adolf and the other together of very necessity it behoves that they go ill; because when joined the one fears not the other.
If thou dost not believe me, consider the ear, how that every herb is known by its seed. Upon the land which Adige and Po water, were worth and courtesy wont to be found before that Frederick had strife; now may a secure passage be had there by whosoever has ceased through shame to speak with good men or to draw near

Per viva forza mal convien che vada;
Perocchè, giunti, l' un l' altro non teme.
Se non mi credi, pon mente alla spiga;
Ch' ogni erba si conosce per lo seme.
In sul paese ch' Adige e Po riga,
Solea valore e cortesia trovarsi,
Prima che Federico avesse briga:
Or può sicuramente indi passarsi
Per qualunque lasciasse, per vergogna,
Di ragionar coi buoni, o d' appressarsi. 120 of Nassau. Not only did he refuse to crown the conqueror, but, says Sismondi, "placing the crown on his own head, he seized a sword, and cried: 'I am Cæsar, I am emperor, I will defend the rights of the empire.'"—Repub. Ital. ch. xxiv.

115 Lombardy, the native, or at least ancestral land of the speaker.
116 valore e cortesia are coupled, Inf. xvi. 67. The latter is the translation into act of the former.—Bianchi.
117 I.e. before the wars between Frederick II. and the Lombard towns.
118 "Indi vale per quel luogo." Corticelli instancing this line. It is more usually an adverb of time.
119, 120 Bianchi renders "by whoever has ceased [to pass there] through shame of," etc. Another reading, which Fraticelli prefers, is co' buoni, d'appressarsi. For lasciare di, cf. xiv. 55; and for per (in per qualunque), xv. 8.
them. There are indeed three old men still, in whom the ancient age reproves the new, and it seems to them long ere God remove them to a better life—Conrad of Palazzo, and the good Gerard, and Guy of Castel, who is better named in French fashion the simple Lombard. Say from this day forth that the Church of Rome, through confounding in herself two governments, falls in the mire, and

Ben v' en tre vecchi ancora, in cui rampogna
L' antica età la nuova, e par lor tardo
Che Dio a miglior vita li ripogna;
Currado da Palazzo, e il buon Gherardo,
E Guido da Castel, che me' si noma
Francescamente il semplice Lombardo.
Di' ognima che la Chiesa di Roma,
Per confondere in sè duo regimenti,

h delia chiesa, 1245.

124 en = sono: formed directly from è.
124, 125 Gherardo da Cammino of Treviso is named in Convito iv. 14 as an instance of nobility. He was so much respected that, according to Philalethes, the brothers Azzo and Francesco of Este sought knighthood at his hands. His son Richard married the daughter of Nino Visconti of Pisa. Conrad of Palazzo was a gentleman of Brescia. Philalethes says he was Podestà of Siena in 1279, "in which year that city concluded peace with the Florentines." But this was in 1269, soon after the defeat of the Sienese at Colle. However, Conrad being a Guelf, may have been put in by the Florentines. His services as Podestà seem to have been much sought after. Guido da Castello is also commemorated in the Convito (iv. 16). He was of Reggio, and seems from a notice in the Ottimo to have been a kind of προεδρος to the French who passed that way. Hence, probably, the allusion in line 126. The explanation of some commentators that "Lombard" was a general name in France for an Italian is not to the point, for if he was a Lombard there is nothing specially French in calling him so.
128 "Et sic non habet ungulam fessam," says the note in Gg., evidently with reference to the passage of Aquinas quoted above.
befouls herself and her burden.” "O my Marco," said I, "thou reasonest well; and now I perceive why the sons of Levi were exempted from the heritage; but what Gerard is that who thou sayest is left for a sample of the extinct folk, in reproof of the savage generation?" "Either thy speech deceives me, or it is making trial of me," he answered me; "that, speaking Tuscan to me, it seems that thou knowest naught of the good Gerard. By other surname I know him not, but if I were to take it from his daughter Gaia.

Cade nel fango, e sè brutta e la soma.
O Marco mio, diss' io, bene argomenti;
Ed or discerzo perchè dal retaggio
Li figli di Levi furono esenti.
Ma qual Gherardo è quel che tu per saggio
Di' ch'è rimaso della gente spenta,
In rimprovero del secol selvaggio?
O tuo parlar m' inganna, o e' mi tenta,
Rispose a me, chè, parlandomi Tosco,
Par che del buon Gherardo nulla senta.
Per altro soprannome io nol conosco.
S' io nol togliessi da sua figlia Gaia.

131, 132 Because of the evils which arise from worldly power being in the hands of churchmen. Cf. De Mon. iii. 13.

133 The commentators puzzle a good deal over this inquiry about a man whose name was afterwards clearly familiar to Dante. But I do not see why the most obvious reason should not be the true one, viz. that Dante had not heard of him at the supposed date of this conversation.

140 As to Gaia's character we have diametrically opposite evidence. The Ottimo says: "madonna Gaja fu donna di tal reggimento circa le dilettazioni amorose, ch'era notorio il suo nome per tutta Italia;" and note in Gg. "ista Gaia fuit pulcherrima vere gaia et tota amorosa trevisana;" while John of Serravalle, Bishop of Fermo, writing some God be with you, for further I go not with you. Thou seest the whiteness, which sends its rays through the smoke, already gleaming; and it behoves me to depart—the angel is there—before that he appears.” Thus he turned, and would no longer hear me.

Dio sia con voi, ch'è più non vegno vosco.
- Vedi l' albòr che per lo fumo raia,
  Già biancheggiare, e me convien partirmi,
  L' Angelo è ivi, prima ch'egli paia:¹
  Così tornò, e più non volle udirmi.

¹ ch' io gli appaia Cass. W. che gli ap. 3 che li paia Gg. 124 che l di paia Land. (note).
  ¶ parli Ald. Land. che più Gg.

eighty years later, calls her “prudens domina, literata, et magnae prudentiae, maximae pulchritudinis.” With him Buti agrees. See Blanc, Erkl. and Foscolo, Discorso sul testo, § 62.
CANTO XVII.

ARGUMENT.

They come out of the smoke as the sun is sinking. Before they reach the ascent to the next circle Dante falls into a trance, and sees, as in a vision, certain notable examples of wrath and its punishment. They enter the fourth circle, where the sin of sloth is purged. Second sunset. Virgil explains how love is the root of all sin, no less than of all virtue.

Bethink thee, reader, if ever in the Alps a mist-cloud has enfolded thee, through the which thou sawest not otherwise than moles through their skin, how when the humid and thick vapours begin to grow thin the globe of the sun enters feebly through them; and thy imagination will be

RICORDITI, lettore, se mai nell' alpe
Ti colse nebbia, per la qual vedessi
Non altrimenti che per pelle talpe:
Come quando i vapori umidi e spessi
A diradar cominciansi, la spera
Del Sol debilemente entra per essi:
E fia la tua immagine leggiera

7 Both Bianchi and Philalethes understand leggiera as meaning "weak": "you will form but a faint image." There seems no reason for this, nor is it quite easy to see the sense of it. Dante has said that the smoke was darker than a dark night, but it does not follow that it was denser than an Alpine mist; nor if it were, would the phenomenon he describes be very different in the two cases.
nimble in coming to see how I first beheld again the sun, which was already in its setting. So, making my own equal to the faithful steps of my master, I issued forth from such a cloud to the rays already dead upon the low shores. O power of fancy, that at whiles so snatchest us from external things, that a man heeds not whereas around are sounding a thousand trumpets, who moves thee, if the sense set thee not forth? Light moves thee, which is given form in

In giugnere a veder com' io rividi
Lo sole in pria, che già nel corcare era.\(^a\)
Sl pareggando i miei co' passi fidi
Del mio Maestro usci' fuor di tal nube,
Ai raggi morti già nei bassi lidi.
O immaginativa, che ne rube
Tal volta sl di fuor, ch' uom non s' accorge,
Perchè d' intorno suonin mille tube,
Chi muove te, se il senso non ti porge?
Muoveti lume, che nel Ciel s' informa,

\(^a\) calcar (for calar) Gg.

\(^{12}\) But they were now halfway up the mountain, so that the sun had not set to them.

\(^{13}\) immaginativa is the faculty by which we are capable of fantasia. This is the φαντασία of De Anima iii. 3, where it is defined as κίνησις ὑπὸ τῆς αληθήσεως τῆς καὶ ἐνέργειαν γενομένης. Elsewhere he says that μνημή and φαντασία belong to the same part of the soul; which Aquinas (S.T. i. Q. 78, A. 4) expands by making fantasia: sensus communis: memoria: aestimativa. Dante uses rather different phraseology, e.g. in V.N. § 16, where he says: “quando la mia memoria movesse la fantasia ad immaginare.” Cf. l. 7.

\(^{15}\) Perchë. So in v. 58.

\(^{16}\) I.e. if the impression corresponds to no external object.
heaven, of itself, or through a will which sends it down. Of the impiety of her, who changed her form into the bird which most delights in singing, in my imagination appeared the traces; and here was my mind so restrained within itself, that from without came nothing then to be received by it. Next rained down within my deep fantasy one crucified, spiteful and proud in his visage, and so he was dying. Around him were the great Ahasuerus, Esther his wife, and the just Mordecai, who was in speech and act so incorrupt. And as this image broke of itself,

\[
\begin{align*}
\text{Per sè, o per voler che giù lo scorze.} \\
\text{Dell’ empietà di lei, che mutò forma} \\
\text{Nell’ uccel che a cantar più si dilettà,} \\
\text{Nell’ immagine mia apparve l’ orma:} \\
\text{E qui fu la mia mente si ristretta} \\
\text{Dentro da sè, che di fuor non venia} \\
\text{Cosa che fosse ancor da lei recetta.} \\
\text{Poi piovve dentro all’ alta fantasia} \\
\text{Un crocifisso dispettoso e fiero} \\
\text{Nella sua vista, e cotal si moria.} \\
\text{Intorno ad esso era il grande Assuero,} \\
\text{Ester sua sposa, e il giusto Mardocheo,} \\
\text{Che fu al dire ed al far così intero.} \\
\text{E come questa immagine rompeo} \end{align*}
\]

\[19,20\] Dante takes the less common version, which makes Procne the nightingale and Philomela the swallow. In Ecl. vi. 81, though not elsewhere, Virgil seems to follow the same. See also Ar. Rhet. iii. 3 fin.

\[21\] orma, "footprint;" hence impression generally.

\[25\] piovve = simply "came down;" cf. Inf. xxx. 95; also Canto xxxii. 110. Note the retention of the Greek accent in fantasia.
in fashion of a bubble whereto fails the water beneath which it was made, there rose in my vision a maiden weeping bitterly, and she was saying: "O queen, wherefore for wrath hast thou chosen to be naught? Thou hast slain thyself not to lose Lavinia; now thou hast lost me: I am she that grieve, mother, for thy ruin rather than for another's." As, when of a sudden a new day strikes on the closed sight, sleep breaks, that quivers when broken before it wholly dies, so my imagination fell down as soon as a light smote my face, greater by far than which is in our wont. I was

Sè per sè stessa, a guisa d' una bulla

Cui manca l' acqua sotto qual si feo:
Surse in mia visione una fanciulla,
Piangendo forte, e diceva: O regina,
Perchè per ira hai voluto esser nulla?
Ancisa t' hai per non perder Lavinia;
Or m' hai perduta: io son essa che lutto,
Madre, alla tua pria ch' all' altrui ruina.
Come si frange il sonno, ove diutto

40

Nuova luce percuote il viso chiuso,
Che fratto guizza pria che muoia tutto:
Così l' immaginar mio cadde giuso,
Tosto che un lume il volto mi percosse
Maggiore assai che quel ch' è innotr' uso.

b Per sè Gg. c il lume Gg. Cass. Ald. Land.

33 sotto qual, the omission of the article is unusual. See Corticelli, p. 79, "È abuso de' volgari." Diez. iii. 339.
34-39 See Æn. xii. 593-607. As Philalethes remarks, Dante supplies the words which Virgil only alludes to.
turning myself to see where I was, when a voice said:
"Here is the ascent," which removed me from every other thought, and made my wish to behold who he was that was speaking, so prompt, as that which never reposes, if it be not met. But as at the Sun, which weighs down our sight, and by excess [of light] veils its form, so my power here failed. "This is a spirit of God, who is directing us on the way up, without prayer, and with his own light himself conceals himself. So deals he with us as a man does with

I' mi volgea per vedere ov' io fosse,
Quand' una voce disse: Qui si monta;
Che da ogni altro intento mi rimosse;
E fece la mia voglia tanto pronta
Di riguardar chi era che parlava,
Che mai non posa, se non si raffronta.
Ma come al sol, che nostra vista grava,
E per soverchio sua figura vela,
Così la mia virtù quivi mancava.
Questi è divino spirito, che ne la
Via d' andar su ne drizza senza prego,
E col suo lume sè medesmo cela.

51 There is a mixture of constructions here. For posa we expect posato avrebbe, followed by se non fosse raffrontata. But the words have reference to the future as well as the past. The Ottimo says:
"L'angelica voce fu di tanta dolcezza, che dice che l'animo suo non si poserà mai, in fino che non si raffronta a riudirla" (so I read the last words).
53 Cf. for the idea viii. 36; and Milton P.L. iii. 380: "Dark with excessive bright thy skirts appear." soverchio, cf. xv. 15.
54 Cf. Par. xxxiiii. 142, and see note at end of Canto iv.
56 senza prego, i.e. without being asked.
herself, for he who awaits a prayer, and sees the wish, unkindly is already putting himself on the side of refusal. Now let us set the foot in accordance with such invitation; let us be diligent to mount before it grows dark, for after it will not be possible, except the day returns.” So spake my leader; and I with him, we turned our steps to a stair; and soon as I was at the first step I felt as it were one move wing near me and fan me in the face, and say:

“Beati pacisci who are free from evil wrath.”

Already were so much raised above us the last rays,

Si fa con noi, come l’uom si fa sego:
    Chè quale aspetta prego, e l’uopo vede,
    Malignamente già si mette al nego.
Ora accordiamo a tanto invito il piede:
    Procacciam di salir prìa che s’abbui:
    Chè poi non si poria, se il dì non riede.
Così disse il mio Duca; ed io con lui
    Volgemmo i nostri passi ad una scala:
    E tosto ch’io al primo grado fui,
Sent’ìmi presso quasi un muover d’ala,
    E ventarmi nel volto, e dir: Beati
    Pacisci, che son senza ira mala.
Già eran sopra noi tanto levati

^secondiamo 5.

58 come l’uom fa sego. The commentators nearly all agree in seeing a reference to the precept “Love thy neighbour as thyself.” Landino’s “cioe l’un huomo con l’altro” is clearly wrong.

67 muover d’ala; not, I think, as Philalethes (agreeing with Blanc) translates “Flügelschlag,” for, if so, the construction of ventar and dir will be changed; but rather an instrumental use of di. Corticelli says: “Di serve all’ablativo in vece di con.”

70 They enter the fourth, or middle circle, that of sloth, and the second night begins.
which the night follows, that the stars were appearing on many sides. "O my virtue, wherefore so melttest thou away?"
I began to say within myself, as I felt the power of my legs placed in truce. We were where the stair mounted no more upwards, and we were fixed, just like a ship which comes ashore on the beach. And I listened a little if I might hear anything in the new circle; afterwards I turned back to my master, and said: "Sweet my Father, say what offence is purged here in the circle where we are? if our feet be stayed, be not thy discourse." And he to me: "The

Gli ultimi raggi che la notte segue,
Che le stelle apparivan da più lati.
O virtù mia, perchè sì ti dileguè?
Fra me stesso dicea, chè mi sentiva
La possa delle gambe posta in tregue.
Noi eravam dove più non saliva
La scala su, ed eravamo affissi,
Pur come nave ch’ alla piaggia arriva:
Ed io attesi un poco s’ io udissi
Alcuna cosa nel nuovo girone:
Poi mi rivolsi al mio Maestro, e dissi:
Dolce mio Padre, dì’, quale offensione
Si purga qui nel giro, dove semo?
Se i piè si stanno, non stea tuo sermon.
Ed egli a me: L’amor del bene, scemo

73 It is almost impossible to render virtù here. It is not, of course, strictly speaking, the faculty, dūvamus of locomotion, which vanishes at the approach of night, but the exercise, or èvéryeua of it: "my operant powers their functions leave to do." Meanwhile the dūvamus (possa) may justly be said to be posta in tregue.
85 "Acedia est fastidium interni boni."—St. Augustine. "Quod quemdam torporem incutit animo."—St. Bernard.
love of the good fallen short of its duty, right here restores itself; here makes again its stroke the ill-delayed oar. But that thou mayest understand yet more openly, turn thy mind to me, and thou shalt reap some good fruit of our tarrying. Neither Creator nor creature," he began, "was ever, my son, without love, either natural, or of the mind: and thou knowest it. The natural is always free from error; but the other may err through a bad object, or by excess, or by defect of vigour. While in regard to the Di suo dover,quiritta si ristora:

Qui si ribatte il mal tardato remo.
Ma perché più aperto intendi ancora,
Volgi la mente a me, e prenderai
Alcun buon frutto di nostra dimora.
Nè creator, nè creatura mai,
Cominciò ei, figliuol, fu senza amore,
O naturale, o d' animo; e tu il sai.
Lo natural è sempre senza errore:
Ma l’ altro puote errar per malo obbietto,
O per troppo, o per poco di vigore.

Et si rib. Gg.
Lo n. fu Ald. Land. Bi.

87 Bianchi’s explanation “qui si punisce il tardo rematore,” is, as Blanc points out, weak, and also does not account for ribatte. Landino halts between two opinions: “Usa traslazione dalla ciurma di galea, la quale voga pigramente, è con battiture punita, e costretta a battere il remo.” Philalethes has: “Hier holt wieder ein man durch frischen Ruderschlag die schlimme Zögrung.” Cf. xii. 5.

92-3 Cf. xvi. 90. naturale o d’animo, instinctive or rational.

94 Sum. Theol. i. Q. 60, Art. 1. “Sicut cognitionis naturalis semper est vera ita dilectio naturalis semper est recta; cum amor naturalis nihil alius sit quam inclinationi naturae indita ab auctore naturae. Dicere ergo quod inclinationi naturae non sit recta est derogare auctori naturae.”
first it is well directed, and in regard to the second moderates itself, it cannot be an occasion of evil delight; but when it turns aside to ill, or runs in the way of good with more care or with less than it ought, against the Maker operates his work. Hence thou mayest understand, how it behoves that love should be the seed in you of every virtue, and of every operation which merits punish-

Mentre ch' egli è nel primo ben diretto,
E ne' secondi sè stesso misura,
Esser non può cagion di mal diletto;
Ma quando al mal si torce, o con più cura,
O con men che non dee, corre nel bene,
Contra il Fattore adovra sua fattura.
Quinci comprendere puoi, ch' esser conviene
Amor sementa in voi d' ogni virtute,
E d'ogni operazion che merta pene.

97, 98 I have followed the reading of the Aldine of 1515, nel primo, which is also that of Gg. and Cass., and seems to give a better sense than that which is obtained by reading ne' primi ben, and taking it to mean "towards the first goods," i.e. God and virtue, the second being the goods of this world. As I understand the words they mean—"so long as regards the object the love is well directed; and, as regards degree, is duly moderated, erring neither by excess nor defect." And with this the Ottimo seems to agree, though the passage is obviously corrupt: "quando l' uomo si costituisce cosa, e così è [read, cost. cost., che sia] buono l' obietto, e mala [read l' ama] quanto dee." So the comm. of another MS. at Cambridge: "cioè quando a bono obietto," and "cioè nelle affezioni se misura." Secondi: plur. because comprising troppo and poco.

103-5 This is the foundation of Aquinas' ethical doctrine, to be found passim in S.T., e.g. ii. i. Q. 28, A. 6: "Omne agens agit propter finem aliquem; finis autem est bonum desideratum et amatum uni-cuique. Unde manifestum est quod omne agens quodcunque sit agit quacunque actionem ex aliquo amore." It is of course a development of ἀγαθῷ τινὸς ἐφιέρας.
ment. Now, seeing that love can never turn back its gaze from the weal of its subject, things are safe from hatred of themselves; and seeing that it is not possible to conceive any being as divided, or standing of itself apart, from its first cause, every affection is cut off from hating that. It remains, if in my division I rightly estimate, that the ill which is loved is that of the neighbour, and this love takes

Or perchè mai non può dalla salute
Amor del suo suggetto volger viso,\(^h\)
Dall' odio proprio son le cose tute:
E perchè intendere non si può diviso,
Nè per sè stante, alcuno esser dal primo,\(^110\)
Da quello odiare ogni affetto è deciso.
Resta, se dividendo bene stimo,
Che il mal che s' ama è del prossimo: ed esso

\(^h\) torcer viso W.

\(^{107}\) Witte’s reading, torcer, is not only against the weight of authority, but I think inconsistent with the meaning. Odio is the exact opposite of amore; and, therefore, according to the rule stated in note to iv. 100, volger is the word required.

\(^{111}\) Nor is it possible to hate God. Dante goes further than St. Thomas (S.T. ii. 2. Q. 34), who holds that though “secundum essentiam suam,” God cannot be hated, “secundum quosdam justitiae suae effectus,” He may be. Ought we not to read effetto here? Cf. xi. 3, where there is a v.l. affetto, showing that copyists confused the two. Of course the use of effectus, in the passage quoted from Aquinas, is in a different sense.

\(^{112}\) dividendo in its technical sense as a logical term (διαμονή); from general to individuals.
birth in three modes in your clay. There is who, through his neighbour being kept down, hopes for excellence, and only for this reason yearns that he may be from his greatness brought low. There is who fears to lose power, grace, honour, and fame, in case another mounts up, wherefore he grows so sad that he loves the contrary; and there is who through injury appears so to take shame that he becomes gluttonous of vengeance; and such an one it behoves that he put forward another’s ill. This three-formed love bewails itself here below: now I will that thou understand the other,

Amor nasce in tre modi in vostro limo.
È chi, per esser suo vicin soppresso,
Spera eccellenza, e sol per questo brama
Ch' el sia di sua grandezza in basso messo.
È chi podere, grazia, onore, e fama
Teme di perder, perch’ altri sormonti,
Onde s’ attrista si che il contrario ama.

Ed è chi per ingiuria par ch’ adonti
Si che si fa della vendetta ghiotto;
E tal convien che il male altrui impronti.
Questo triforme amor quaggiù disotto
Si piange: or vo’che tu dell’ altro intende,

\footnote{grande, alt. to gratia Gg.}

\footnote{il contrario, his neighbour’s abasement.}
\footnote{impronti. There seems to be some uncertainty as to the meaning of this word. Blanc takes it (following apparently Vellutello) as a form of imprentare, and so in its modern use of “stamps,” “prints.”
But the older commentator explains it by “segni in altri”; the modern by “imagines,” herein agreeing with Bianchi. The latter connects it with Fr. emprunter, as to which see Littré. The Ottimo has “è impronto” (i.e. importunate); Philalethes, “trachten nach.” I take it as directly from “promptus,” “impromptare.”} which hastes to the good with order violated. Each one confusedly apprehends a good wherein his mind may rest, and desires it; wherefore each one strives to reach Him. If a too slow love draws you towards His sight, or to the search of Him, this gallery, after just penitence, torments you for it. Another good there is, which makes not the man happy; it is not happiness, it is not the good essence, fruit and root of every good. The love which gives itself up too much to that bewails itself above us through three circles; but how it is spoken of as tripartite, I say nothing thereof, to the end that thou mayest enquire of it for thyself."

Che corre al ben con ordine corrotto.
Ciascun confusamente un bene apprende,
Nel qual si quieti l' animo, e desira:
Per che di giunger lui ciascun contende.
Se lento amor in lui veder vi tira;
O a lui acquistar, questa cornice
Dopo giusto penter ve ne martira.
Altro ben è che non fa l' uom felice:
Non è felicità, non è la buona
Essenzia, d' ogni ben frutto e radice.\(^k\)
L'amor, ch' ad esso troppo s' abbandona,
Di sovra a noi si piange per tre cerchi;
Ma come tripartito si ragiona,
Tacciolo, acciocchè tu per te ne cerchi.

\(^k\) essenza alcun bon frutto et laradice 5 d' ogni buon frutto r. W.

128 \textbf{queti . . . . desira.} See the passage from Aquinas quoted in note to xviii. 19.

130 "Peccatum acediae est quando quis contristatur in his quae ei imminent facienda propter Deum." S. T. ii. 2. Art. 35, Q. 3.
CANTO XVIII.

ARGUMENT.

During the night Virgil continues to explain how love is the root of all action, and proceeds further to discourse of free-will and the origin of morality. A great crowd of souls run quickly past, calling to mind instances of alacrity. Dante speaks with a certain Abbot; and after hearing the reproach of sloth from those who go last of the crowd, he falls asleep.

The profound Teacher had put an end to his reasoning, and was looking intently in my face, if I appeared content. And I, whom yet a new thirst began to urge, was silent outwardly, and within was saying, Perhaps the excessive inquiry that I make grieves him. But that truthful Father, who took note of the timid will that would not disclose itself, by speaking, furnished to me courage to speak.

Posto avea fine al suo ragionamento
L' alto Dottore, ed attento guardava
Nella mia vista s' io parea contento:
Ed io, cui nuova sete ancor frugava,
   Di fuor taceva, e dentro dicea: Forse
Lo troppo dimandar, ch' io fo, li grava.
Ma quel padra verace, che s' accorse
   Del timido voler che non s' apriva,
Parlando, di parlare ardir mi porse.
Wherefore I: "Master, my sight is so quickened in thy light, that I discern clearly all that thy reasoning imports or describes; wherefore I pray thee, sweet Father dear, that thou demonstrate to me the love to which thou dost reduce all good working and its contrary." "Direct," said he, "towards me the keen eyes of thy intellect, and the error will be manifest to thee of the blind who make themselves leaders. The mind which is created ready to love, is quick to move to everything which pleases it so soon

Ond' io: Maestro, il mio veder s'avviva
Si nel tuo lume, ch' io discerno chiaro
Quanto la tua ragion porti, o descriva:
Però ti prego, dolce Padre caro,
Che mi dimostri amore, a cui riduci
Ogni buono operare e il suo contrario.
Drizza, disse, ver me l'acute luci
Dello intelletto, e fieti manifesto
L' error de' ciechi che si fanno duci.
L' animo, ch' è creato ad amar presto,
Ad ogni cosa è mobile che piace,

39 sqq. Cf. xvi. 90, xvii. 92-95. The mind is potentially capable of being attracted by pleasure, and is actually attracted by the presence of the pleasant object, or by the abstract notion which the apprehensive faculty (see below) forms of it in the mind. Thus desire, which may be good or bad, is aroused, and action follows: οὗ γὰρ ἡ ὅρεξις αὐτῆς ἡ ἀρχὴ τοῦ πρακτικοῦ νο Gazette
. . . νοῦς μὲν οὖν πᾶς ὁ ὅρθος ὅρεξις δὲ καὶ φαντασία καὶ ὅρθη καὶ οὖκ ὅρθη (De An. iii. 10). Comparing the first clause of this with Eth. vi. 2 (πράξεως μὲν οὖν ἀρχῇ προαίρεσις δὲν ἡ κίνησις . . . προαιρετικὰς δὲ ὅρεσις), I think we must take in atto, not with Blanc, Bianchi, and Philalethes as = actu, but as depending on desto. Cf. also S. T. ii. 1. Q. 26. 2: "Prima immutatio appetitus ab appetibili, vocatur amor; qui nihil est aliud quam complacentia appetibilis, et ex hac complacentia sequitur motus in appetibile qui est desiderium; et ultimo, quies, quae est gaudium."
as by the pleasure it is aroused to act. Your apprehensive power draws an intention from a truly existing object, and displays it within you, so that it makes the mind turn to that. And if, turning back, it bends itself towards it, that bending is love, that is nature, which for pleasure is binding itself anew within you. Afterward, as the fire moves on high, by reason of its form, which has the nature to rise there where it abides most in its matter, so the mind seized enters into desire, which is a motion of the spirit, and never Tosto che dal piacere in atto è desto.

Vostra apprensiva da esser verace
Tragge intenzione, e dentro a voi la spiega,
Si che l' animo ad essa volger face.
E se, rivolto, in ver di lei si piega,
Quel piegare è amor, quello è natura,
Che per piacer di nuovo in voi si lega.
Poi come il fuoco muovesi in altura,
Per la sua forma, ch' è nata a salire
Là dove più in sua materia dura:
Così l' animo preso entra in desìre
Ch' è moto spiritale, e mai non posa.

22 sqq. Apprehension or conception consists in the power which the mind has of forming an image of attributes. Images so formed are first intentions (eidos, species intelligibiles), as when we regard the individual Socrates as man, white, etc. Second intentions are obtained by abstracting the relations of first intentions to one another, as humanity, whiteness, etc. First intentions are predicatable, second not.—Mansel. da esser verace. Cf. Pascal: "Les appréhensions des sens sont toujours vraies." De An. iii. 6: "HSV τῶν ἀδιάμετρων νόησε ἐν τούτωι περὶ ὧν ἐστι τὸ ψεύδος." So S.T. i. Q. 85. 1.

26-31 An expansion of xvii. 93.

27 si lega, as we should say, "is striking a fresh root."

30 I.e. towards the sphere of fire.
reposes until the thing loved makes it rejoice. Now can it appear to thee how much the truth is hidden from the folk who aver that each love is, in itself, a laudable thing, because perhaps its matter appears always to be good; but not every seal is good, even though good be the wax."
"Thy words, and my wit which follows them," I answered him, "have disclosed love to me; but that has made me teem more with doubt, in that if love is offered to us from without, and the soul goes not with other foot, whether it goes straight or crooked is not its own merit." And he

Fin che la cosa amata il fa gioire.
Or ti puote apparer quant' è nascosa
La veritate alla gente ch' avvera
Ciascuno amore in sè laudabil cosa;
Perocchè forse appar la sua matera
Sempr' esser buona; ma non ciascun segno
È buono, ancor che buona sia la cera.
Le tue parole e il mio seguace ingegno,
Risposi io lui, m' hanno amor discorto;
Ma ciò m' ha fatto di dubbiar più pregno;
Chè s' amore è di fuori a noi offerto,
E l’ anima non va con altro piede,
Se dritto o torto va, non è suo merto.
Ed egli a me: Quanto ragion qui vede

37 matera must here be the mind, or rather, its dūnāmus (ἐνων ἡ ἕλη δūnāmus. De An. ii. 1). Following the analogy of ll. 28–30, we have the tendency to rise: fire: the tendency to love: the mind; and νουσ πᾶς ὅθος comes in again.

42-45 The objection that "apprehensum secundum sensum ex necessitate movet appetitum sensitivum," and therefore "apprehensum secundum intellectum ex necessitate movet voluntatem," is dealt with by Aquinas S.T. i. Q. 82, A. 2.
to me: "All that reason here sees I can tell thee; beyond that point wait only on Beatrice, for it is work of faith. Every substantial form that is separate from matter, and is in union with it, has a specific virtue stored within itself, the which without operation is not felt, nor demonstrates itself save by effect, as by green leaves life in a plant.

Dir ti poss' io; da indi in là 'tutta
Pure a Beatrice, ch' è opra di fede.a
Ogni forma sustanzial, che setta
È da materia, ed è con lei unita,
Specifica virtute ha in sè colletta,
La qual senza operar non è sentita,
Nè si dimostra ma che per effetto,
Come per verdi fronde in pianta vita.b

a che opera è Cass. W. che opera di Gg.
b in p. è irta Gg.

49 Formae separatae are God, angels, human souls. The last (which, as involving the τὸ τί ἐστιν, or "essential quiddity," are substantial forms) are united with matter to constitute the man ("unus est homo anima rationalis et caro"), and possess the faculty of forming images or species; for so I think we must understand specifica, and not as merely = special, peculiar. De An. iii. 4, where Aristotle approves the view that the ψυχή νοητική is δυνάμεις the τόπος εἰδών. St. Thomas's doctrine as to the origin of knowledge is contained in S.T. i. Q. 84, 85, which should be read, together with the sketch of the psychology of Thomas Aquinas, given by Philalethes, at the end of this Canto, by anyone who wishes to comprehend Dante's system of ethics and politics. Lines 60-69 explain how the former science is connected with his psychology and ultimately with his political system, as may be seen by comparing xvi. 75 sqq., and De Mon. i. 14.

It may be noticed that the commentator of Cass. takes setta to mean septa, "id est circumclusa." Of course he is wrong. The postilla to the line gives an alternative "abscissa."

52 ὁ ἀρα καλούμενος τῆς ψυχῆς νοῦς οὐθέν ἐστιν ἐνεργείᾳ τῶν ὄρων πρὶν νοεῖν. De An. iii. 4.
54 Cf. xvi. 113, 114.
CANTO XVIII.

Wherefore, man knows not whence comes the understanding of the first cognitions, and the affection of the first objects of appetite, which are in you, as in the bee the desire of making its honey; and this first volition admits not desert of praise or blame. Now, whereas about this every other gathers itself, there is innate in you the faculty which counsels, and which should hold the threshold of

Però, là onde vegna lo intelletto
Delle prime notizie; uomo non sape,
E de' primi appetibili l' affetto,
Che sono in voi, sì come studio in ape
Di far lo mele; e questa prima voglia
Merto di lode o di biasmo non cape.

Or, perchè a questa ogni altra si raccolga, c
Innata v' è la virtù che consiglia, d
E dell' assenso de' tener la soglia. e

55-57 "The origins of knowledge and appetite are unknown." It will be seen that Dante does not hold the doctrine of Innate Ideas. Nothing is innate save free-will.

59, 60 Eth. Nic. ii. 1. δὴ λοιπὸν ὅτι φιλαιθῆς τῶν θυσίων ἄρετῶν φύσει ἡμῶν ἐγκέφαλος.

61 There are several interpretations of this line. Of those who render perchè "in order that," some take questa to be the virtù about to be mentioned, but this, as Bianchi says, involves too great a dislocation of the words. Others, e.g. Witte and Philalethes, interpret "in order that every other will may unite itself with this primary and blameless will;" but they seem to forget that, if blameless, it also has no merit, being merely instinctive. In order for desert to exist a choice must be made. I have, therefore, followed Comm. Cass. and Bianchi, taking perchè, as in v. 58, xvii. 15; almost = "although."

62 la virtù, i.e. free-will. S.T. i. Q. 22. 2. "Agunt creaturae rationales per liberum arbitrium, quo consiliantur et eligunt."
assent. This is the principle whereto occasion of desert in you is attached, according as it gathers up and winnows out good or guilty loves. They who in reasoning have gone to the foundation have taken note of that innate liberty, wherefore they have left morality to the world.
Whence let us lay down that of necessity arises every love which kindles itself within you; of keeping it in check the power is in you. The noble faculty, Beatrice understands for free-will, and therefore look that thou have it in mind, if she takes in hand to speak to thee of it."

Quest' è il principio là onde si piglia
Cagion di meritare in voi, secondo'
Che buoni e rei amori accoglie e viglia.
Color che ragionando andaro al fondo,
S' accorser d' esta innata libertate;
Però moralità lasciaro al mondo.
Onde pognam che di necessitate
Surga ogni amor che dentro a voi s' accende,
Di ritenarlo è in voi la potestate.
La nobile virtù, Beatrice intende
Per lo libero arbitrio, e però guarda
Che l' abbi a mente, s' a parlar ten prende.

1 Ragion Gg. Cass. 1234 W.

64 65 S.T. ii. 1. Q. 114, A. 4. "Humanus actus habet rationem merendi ex parte liberi arbitrii; in quantum scilicet homo habet prae ceteris creaturis ut per se agat, voluntarie agens." Eth. Nic. iii. 5. Ἐφ' ἡμῶν δὲ καὶ ἡ ἀρετὴ ὑμοίως δὲ καὶ η ἡ κακία.
67 moralità, the science of ethics.
70 Beatrice nowhere uses this expression, but it may be deduced from Par. v. 19 sqq. Cf. De Mon. i. 14: "Haec libertas est maximum donum humanæ naturæ a Deo collatum."
The Moon slow moving at about the night’s meridian was making the stars appear more scant to us, shaped like a bucket that should be all glowing; and was running her course against the heaven, by that road which the Sun inflames at that time, when the man of Rome sees him between Sards and Corsicans as he is setting: and that noble shade for whose sake Pietola has a greater name

La luna, quasi a mezza notte tarda,
Facea le stelle a noi parer più rade,
Fatta com’ un secchione che tutto arda.
E correva contra il ciel, per quelle strade
Che il Sole infiamma allor, che quel da Roma 8o
Tra’ Sardi e’ Corsi il vede quando cade;
E quell’ ombra gentil, per cui si noma
Pietola più che villa Mantovana,

76 The usual interpretation is “latened in its rising nearly to midnight;” but, in the first place, it would rise fully an hour before that time; and, secondly, the words must be meant to indicate the hour which we have now reached, and which would seem from the long conversation which has taken place to be a good deal later. I therefore prefer to take mezza notte as meaning, like mezzo di, the meridian line, only with regard to those heavenly bodies which are seen at night; comparing xxv. 2, 3 and xxxiii. 103, 104. Quasi, much as in iii. 131. The time would thus be between 2 and 3 A.M., the moon “southing” at this age soon after 3.

78 secchione is the large hemispherical bucket which may still be seen in Italy. Looked at somewhat obliquely the outline of one of these forms no bad comparison for the gibbous moon. arda: for the use of subj. see Diez iii. 347.

80, 81 I.e. when he sets west by south, or about the end of November. Strade means therefore the stars of Scorpio, corresponding with the sign of Sagittarius, in which the sun is at that season, and of which the moon would by this have traversed about half.

83 Or “has a greater name than that of a Mantuan village.” This seems to be the interpretation taken by Pietro di Dante—“ultra uillas villas Mantuanas nominatur,” and is perhaps preferable, as villa, though than Mantua town, had put aside the burthen of my load. Wherefore I, who had gleaned his reasoning open and clear upon my questions, was standing like a man who, drowsy, wanders. But this drowsiness was taken from me suddenly by folk who behind our shoulders were already turned toward us. And as Ismenus once saw, and Asopus, a fury and trampling along their banks by night, only because the Thebans had need of Bacchus, just such a trampling through that circle curves its way, according to what I

Del mio carcar disposto avea la soma.
Perch' io, che la ragione aperta e piana
Sovra le mie questioni avea ricolta,
Stava com' uom, che sonnolento vana.
Ma questa sonnolenza mi fu tolta
Subitamente da gente, che dopo
Le nostre spalle a noi era già volta.
E quale Ismeno già vide ed Asopo,
Lungo di sè di notte furia e calca,
Pur che i Teban di Bacco avessero uopo:
Tale per quel giron suo passo falca, used by Dante occasionally for "town," more often meant "village." See, for instance, Landino's note to xv. 97, where he says that sire, in the sense of signore, and villa, in that of città, are both French words. Here, too, he begins by saying that Pietola is "una villa del Mantovano."

95 So the river Ismenus says of himself (Stat. Theb. ix. 434):

"Ille ego clamatus sacris ululatibus amnis
Qui molles thiasos Bacchaeaque cornua puro
Fonte lavare feror."

There would seem to be an allusion to the "Bacchae" of Euripides.

94 Falca. There is some uncertainty as to the force of this word. Landino explains it "piegare," and this is the meaning usually adopted, e.g. by Philalethes, who renders "dreht," and looking to the etymological connection between "falx" and "flectere," it is perhaps the most satisfactory. Bianchi thinks it is a metaphor from the action of a saw, of those coming whose rider is a good will and a just love. Soon they were upon us, because all that mighty rout was moving at a run; and two in front were shouting in their weeping: "Mary ran with haste into the hill-country," and "Caesar to subdue Ilerda, stung Marseilles, and then ran into Spain." "Haste, haste, that the time be not lost through too little love," were the others crying after them; "so that the study to do well may refresh grace."

"O folk, in whom keen fervour at the present haply repairs negligence and delay put by you, through lukewarmness, in well-doing, this man who lives (and surely I

Per quel ch' io vidi, di color venendo,
Cui buon volere e giusto amor cavalca.
Tosto fur sovra noi, perché correndo
Si movea tutta quella turba magna;\textsuperscript{8}
E due dinanzi gridavan piangendo:
Maria corse con fretta alla montagna;
E: Cesare, per soggiogare Ilerda,
Punse Marsilia, e poi corse in Ispagna.
Ratto, ratto, che il tempo non si perda
Per poco amor, gridavan gli altri appresso;
Che studio di ben far grazia rinverda.
O gente, in cui fervore acuto adesso
Ricompie forse negligenza e indugio\textsuperscript{1}
Da voi per tepidezza in ben far messo,

\textsuperscript{8} Si monta Cass. \textsuperscript{h} furor Gg. favore 12345. \textsuperscript{1} Ricopre Gg.

high-stepping horse; Fr. faucher. Witte, from his rendering "schleunigen," seems to follow those who, like Vellutello, take it as the opposite of disfalcare; "increase," as opposed to "take away from," but this is contrary to all etymology.

\textsuperscript{100} Luke i. 39.
\textsuperscript{101} Caesar B. C. i. 36 sqq., Lucan Phars. iii. 453–55, etc.
do not lie to you), wishes to go upward, so only that the Sun light us again; wherefore tell us on what side the opening is near.” These were words of my leader; and one of those spirits said: “Come behind us, and thou wilt find the passage. We are so full of will to move ourselves that rest we cannot; wherefore pardon us if discourtesy thou deemest our justice. I was Abbot in Saint Zeno at Verona, under the empire of the good Redbeard, of whom

Questi, che vive (e certo io non vi bugio) Vuole andar su, purchè il Sol ne riluca; Però ne dite ond’ è presso il pertugio, Parole furon queste del mio Duca; E un di quegli spirti disse: Vieni Diretto a noi, e troverai la buca. Noi siam di voglia a muoverci si pieni, Che ristar non potem: però perdona, Se villania nostra giustizia tieni. Io fui Abate in san Zeno a Verona, Sotto lo imperio del buon Barbarossa, 114 That is, go in the same direction as we are going. Of course Dante could not move now, as it was night.

118 There is some uncertainty about the speaker. The older people say his name was Albert; but there appears to have been no abbot of that name in the reign of Barbarossa, the incumbent of the office during the latter part of that time being named Gerard. One Albertio was, however, abbot in 1145. The Ottimo gives no name; but the mistake probably arose from a confusion of the speaker with the person of whom he speaks. In connection with Dante’s choice of an ecclesiastic as an example of “accidia,” it may be noted that St. Bernard says: “Hoc quidem vitio religiosi homines maxime affiguntur.”

119 There is some controversy as to whether buon is to be regarded as ironical. Bianchi and Witte both think so, the latter oddly enough speaking as though the epithet were used by Dante in his own person.
Milan yet talks grieving. And such an one has already one foot within the grave that shortly will lament that monastery, and will be sorry to have had power there; because his son, evil in his whole body, and in his mind worse, and who was basely born, has he placed in the room of its true pastor.” I know not if he said more, or if he held his peace, so much already had he traversed beyond us; but this I heard, and to retain Di cui dolente ancor Melan ragiona.

E tale ha già l’ un pie dentro la fossa,
Che tosto piangerà quel monistero,
E tristo fia d’ avervi avuta possa.
Perché suo figlio, mal del corpo intero,
E della mente peggio, e che mal nacque,
Ha posto in luogo di suo pastor vero.\(^{k}\)
Io non so se più disse, o s’ ei si tacque,
Tant’ era già di là da noi trascorso;

\(^{k}\) È posto Gg.

The answer to this question must depend upon who the speaker is. It is to be noted that Verona was the last of the Lombard towns to join the league against Frederick I.; in fact, she did not do so till 1164, two years after the destruction of Milan. Now, if any abbot of San Zeno died during those two years he would naturally speak favourably of the great emperor; whether this was so I am unable to ascertain. After peace was made in 1183, Frederick and the Pope visited Verona together, and were, according to the chronicler, “hilariter recepti et honorifice pertractati,” which looks as if the “Redbeard” had been personally as popular there as other Tedeschi were long afterwards, though his rule may have been no less detested than theirs.

\(^{m}\) tale. Albert della Scala, father of Can Grande. He died 1301 (Villani viii. 48), having previously made his bastard son Joseph, Abbot of St. Zeno. This man is said to have been lame and an evil-liver. As Philalethes points out, his tenure of the office would thus have coincided in part with Dante’s sojourn at Verona. See also Foscolo, “Discorso sul Testo,” § lxxxvi.
it pleased me. And he who was my succour at every need said: "Turn thee hither, see two of them come putting a bit on sloth." In rear of all they were saying: "The folk to whom the sea opened itself were dead before Jordan beheld his inheritors. And that people, who suffered not the toil to the full end with the son of Anchises, offered themselves to life inglorious." Then when those shades were so separated from us that they could no more be seen, a new thought formed itself within

Ma questo intesi, e ritener mi piacque.
E'quei, che m' era ad ogni uopo soccorso,
Disse: Volgiti in qua, vedine due
Venire dando all' accidia di morso.
Diretto a tutti dicean: Prima fue
Morta la gente, a cui il mar s' aperse,
Che vedesse Giordan le rede sue.
E quella, che l' affanno non sofferse
Fino alla fine col figliuol d' Anchise,
Sè stessa a vita senza gloria offerse.
Poi quando fur da noi tanto divise
Quell' ombre, che veder più non potersi,
Nuovo pensier dentro da me si mise,
Del qual più altri nacquero e diversi:

1 Da quel Gs.

130 dando di morso. Most commentators understand this to mean "blaming," "reproaching;" "mordendo o trafiggendo."—Bianchi. I think, however, we must take it as parallel with xiv. 143. P. di Dante seems again to be right in explaining "pro freno debet esse . . . a vitio tali retinendo nos ipso," though, in the case of this particular vice, the metaphor is rather bold.

me, of which more were born other and divers, and so I went idly from one to another, that I closed my eyes for wandering, and changed my musing into dream.

E tanto d’ uno in altro vaneggiai,
Che gli occhi per vaghezza ricopersi,
E il pensamento in sogno trasmutai.

144 The modern commentators seem all to understand vaghezza in the usual sense of “pleasure;” but Landino’s explanation: “cioè, per quel discorso vagabondo,” appears to suit the passage better, as following up the idea of “vaneggiai.” For vago, in the sense of Lat. vagus, see xix. 22.
CANTO XIX.

ARGUMENT.

Dante has a dream of a Siren. Third sunrise. They mount up to the fifth circle, where they find the souls lying prostrate, purging themselves of the sins of avarice and prodigality. Dante talks with Pope Adrian the Fifth.

In the hour when the heat of day can no more warm the cold of the Moon, being overcome by Earth, or at times by Saturn; when the geomants see their Greater Fortune in

1 Nell'ora; the regular phrase with which these dreams are introduced. See ix. 13, xxvii. 94.
2 In Conv. ii. 14 he speaks of the "freddura di Saturno."
3 The Geomants obtained their results from certain arbitrary arrangements of dots on the ground, one of which in this form ::::: was known as the Greater Fortune. This shape can be obtained from some of the stars on the confines of Pisces and Aquarius, which would be rising just before daybreak. (The view of Philalethes that it is to be found in the Dolphin will not do, as at the beginning of April that constellation rises soon after midnight.)
the east before the dawn, rise by a way that stays little while dusk for it; came to me in a dream a woman stammering, with her eyes squinting, and crooked upon her feet, with her hands deformed, and pallid of hue. I began to gaze at her; and as the Sun strengthens the cold limbs which the night weighs down, so my look made her tongue nimble, and afterwards set her wholly straight in a little space, and so coloured her marred countenance as love will have it. After that she had her speech thus set free, she began to sing so that with pain should I have turned away from her my attention. "I am," she sang, "I am a

Veggiono in oriente innanzi all’ alba
Surger per via’ che poco le sta bruna;
Mi venne in sogno una femmina balba,
Con gli occhi guerci, e sovra i piè distorta,
Con le man monche, e di colore scialba.
Io la mirava: e come il Sol conforta
Le fredde membra che la notte agrava,
Così lo sguardo mio le facea scorta
La lingua, e poscia tutta la drizzava
In poco d’ ora, e lo smarrito volto,
Come amor vuol, così le colorava.
Poi ch’ell’ avea il parlàr così disciolto,
Cominciava a cantar sì, che con pena
Da lei avrei mio intento rivolto.
Io son, cantava, io son dolce Sirena,

7 This woman is almost universally understood to denote the pleasures of the flesh, and, from a comparison of l. 59 of this Canto with xvii. 137, it is clear that this must be at least part of Dante’s meaning.
In the note to Canto xxvii., however, I have given reasons for thinking that the allegory of the three dreams is more distinctly connected.
sweet Sirens, who charm aside the mariners amid the sea; so am I full of pleasure to hear. I turned Ulysses from his road, wandering to my song; and he who makes his home with me rarely departs, so wholly I give him peace." Her mouth was not yet closed, when a dame appeared, holy and ready, close beside me to put that one to confusion. "O Virgil, Virgil, who is this?" proudly she began to say;

Che i marinari in mezzo il mar dismago. 20
Tanto son di piacere a sentir piena.
Io volsi Ulisse del suo cammin vago
Al canto mio: e qual meco s'ausa
Rado sen parte, si tutto l' appago.
Ancor non era sua bocca richiusa,
Quando una donna apparve santa e presta
Lunghesso me, per far colei confusa.
O Virgilio, Virgilio, chi è questa?
Fieramente dicea: ed ei veniva

a Io trassi Ald.  b Col canto W.

20 The usual meaning of dismago will hardly suit here; unless we may render it "unman." But cf. xxvii. 104. Philalethes has "ver-lockt;" Land., "lusingare." (See Glossary.)

22 Bianchi and Philalethes both take vago in its original and less usual sense of "vagus;" but both regard it as agreeing with cammin. The objection to this is that it weakens the point; and besides, at the particular time Ulysses was going with a definite aim. It seems better to take it as "proleptic." volsi appears to have better authority than trassi. The principal objection to it is that the Sirens did not turn Ulysses out of his road; but this does not seem of much importance. We may either suppose her to be lying, or Dante may have got the story incorrectly, or may have confused it with that of Circe. Possibly the right reading is lorsi.

dicea. The Ottimo oddly takes this as first person, as though Dante were summoning Virgil. It is quite clear that he is entirely passive in his dreams.
and he came, with his eyes fixed only on that honest one. He seized the other, and opened her before, cleaving her draperies, and showed me her belly: that awoke me with the stench that issued therefrom. I turned my eyes, and the good Virgil said: “At least three calls have I given thee; rise and come. Let us find the gateway by which thou mayest enter.” I lifted myself up, and wholly with the high day were already filled the circles of the sacred mount, and we were going with the new Sun on our reins.

Con gli occhi fitti pure in quella onesta. 30
L’ altra prendeva, e dinanzi l’ apriva
Fendendo i drappi, e mostravami il ventre:" Quel mi svegliò col puzzo che n’ usciva.
Io volsi gli occhi; e il buon Virgilio: Almen tred
Voci t’ ho messe, dicea, surgi e vieni:" Troviam la porta, per lo qual tu entre.f
Su mi levai: e tutti eran già pieni
Dell’ alto di i giron del sacro monte,
Ed andavam col Sol nuovo alle reni.

c mostrandomi Cass. 3 W.
d buon maestro Gg.; al buon m. e mentre Cass. 1245. Virg e mentre 3; Io mossi W.

e messe e Gg.; Voci come se dicesi 145; dicesse 3; comesse dicea 2.
f l’aperto Ald. Land.; l’aperta W.

31 Some take this as the action of the donna onesta; but it seems better to suppose that she only calls Virgil to help. If, as I believe, she is the donna gentil of Inf. ii. 94, this would be in keeping with her procedure there.

34, 35 The earlier editions have made a wonderful confusion of these lines. Even Aldus reads “al mentre;” but the first five clearly have not the least idea of the sense. 1345, for instance, read come se for t’ ho messe. For the curious rhythm almen tre, cf. per li in xx. 4.

39 Observe that they have now passed the north side of the mountain, and are going rather south of west.
Following him I was bearing my brow as one who has it laden with thought, who makes of himself a bridge’s half arch, when I heard: “Come, here is the passage,” spoken, in fashion sweet and benign, such as is never heard in this mortal march. With his wings open, which appeared a swan’s, he who thus spoke to us turned us upward, between the two walls of the hard flint. He moved his feathers then, and fanned us, affirming that blessed are Qui lugent, for they shall have their souls lords of consolation. “What

Segue ilu, portava la mia fronte
Come colui che’l ha di pensier carca,
Che fa di se un mezzo arco di ponte;
Quando io udi’: Venite, qui si varca;
Parlare in modo soave e benigno,
Qual non si sente in questa mortal marca.
Con l’ ali aperte che parean di cigno,
Volseci in su colui che si parlongne,
Tra i due pareti del duro macigno.
Mosse le penne poi e ventlinone,
Qui lugent affermando esser beati,
Ch’ avran di consolar, l’anime donne.

8 consegnar Gg.

50 It is not easy, as Philaletes points out, to detect at first sight the special applicability here of this beatitude. His explanation is that those who mourn are those who, being most convinced of their incompleteness, strive most to improve; which is just the point wherein the "accidiosi" fail.

51 donne is the reading of nearly every edition. Buti has done (≡done), which does not rhyme. Blanc seems to find a difficulty in the use of the word, but agrees, faute de mieux, with the usual interpretation, which, from the expressions used in his Dict., he seems to think he was the first to suggest. It occurs in the same sense in the ails thee that thou lookest only toward the earth?" my Guide began to say to me, when we had both mounted up a little way from the Angel. And I: "With so great suspicion a new vision makes me to go, which so bends me to itself that I cannot part myself from thinking of it." "Hast thou seen," said he, "that ancient witch, who alone above us from this point laments? Hast thou seen how the man looses himself from her? Suffice it thee, and beat on earth thy heels, turn back thine eyes to the lure, which the Eternal King is whirling with the mighty wheels." Like

Che hai, che pure in ver la terra guati?
La Guida mia incominciò a dirmi,
Poco amende dall’ Angel sormontati.

Ed io: Con tanta suspizion fa irmi
Novella vision ch’ a sè mi piega,
Sì ch’ io non posso dal pensar partirmi.

Vedesti, disse, quella antica strega,
Che sola sovra noi omai si piagne?
Vedesti come l’ uom da lei si slega?

Bastiti, e batti a terra le calcagne:
Gli occhi rivolgi al logoro, che gira
Lo rege eterno con le ruote magne.

Canzone: "Amor tu vedi ben," 1. 6; "D’ogni crudeltà si fece donna."
Cf. the Span.: "Ser dueño de alguna cosa." Vellutello’s explanation, which makes anime the object to consolar, and takes donne = gentili, is, like others of his, too absurd to be seriously discussed.

59 So xvii. 137. "Corpus otii tahe confectum concupiscientiarum carnalium pascit ac nutrit insaniam."—Lorenzo Giustiniani, quoted by Perez.

60 Cf. xv. 119.

62–63 The simile of the falcon is evidently suggested by logoro. Dante is fond of drawing his illustrations from this sport. See for example Inf. xvii. 127; and Philalethes here.
the falcon which first gazes at his feet, then turns at the cry, and stretches himself forth, for the desire of the food which draws him there, such made I myself, and such, as far as the rock is split to give way to whoso goes up, I went even to the point where one takes to circling.

When I was set free in the fifth circle, I saw folk throughout it which were weeping, lying on the earth all turned downwards. "Adhaesit pavimento anima mea," I heard them say, with sighs so deep that the word was hardly understood. "O elect of God, whose sufferings both hope and justice make less hard, direct us to the ascents on high." "If ye come secure from the lying down, and wish to find the way most quickly, let your right

Quale il falcon che prima a' piè si mira,
Indi si volge al grido, e si pretende,
Per lo disio del pasto che là il tira;
Tal mi fec' io: e tal, quanto si fende
La roccia per dar via a chi va suso,
N' andai infino ove il cerchiar si prende.
Com' io nel quinto giro fui dischiuso,
Vidi gente per esso che piangea,
Giacendo a terra tutta volta in giuso.

Adhaesit pavimento anima mea,
Sentia di lor con si alti sospiri,
Che la parola appena s' intendea.
O eletti di Dio, gli cui soffrirì
E giustizia e speranza fan men duri,
Drizzate noi verso gli alti saliri.
Se voi venite dal giacer sicuri,
E volete trovar la via più tosto,

71 The avaricious.
hands be ever on the outside." Thus prayed the Poet, and thus was answer made a little in advance of us; wherefore I gave heed in their speaking to the other who was hidden; and turned my eyes then to my master, whence he gave me assent, with glad gesture, to that which my face of desire besought. When I had power to do according to my thought, I drew me over that creature, whose words erewhile caused me to remark, saying: "Spirit in whom tears are ripening that without which man cannot turn to God, stay a little for me thy greater care. Tell me who Le vostre destre sien sempre di furi.

Così pregò il poeta, e si risposto
Poco dinanzi a noi ne fu; perch' io
Nel parlare avvisai l' altro nascosto;
E volsi gli occhi allora al Signor mio:*
Ond' egli m' assentì con lieto cenno
Ciò che chiedea la vista del disio.
Poi ch' io potei di me fare a mio senno,
Trassimi sopra quella creatura,
Le cui parole prìa notar mi fennn; 90
Dicendo: Spirto, in cui pianger matura
Quel, senza il quale a Dio tornar non puossi,
Sosta un poco per me tua maggior cura.

There has been some discussion over the meaning of this line. Philalethes has: "Ich, aus solcher Rede, was sonst darin war noch verborgen, merkte," and explains it to be the doubt whether they were living men, and the wish to have their prayers. This is given also by Bianchi; but rightly, as I think, set aside by him as "vuota di concetto;" and certainly any such meaning is very much hidden in the simple direction which the spirit gives. It seems much simpler to take avvisai as in (e.g.) x. 71, and l'al tro as merely = "the other interlocutor," opposed to il poeta.
thou wast, and why ye have your backs turned upward, and if thou wilt that I obtain aught for thee there whence I have moved yet living." And he to me: "Wherefore the heaven turns our back parts to it, thou shall know, but first Scias quod ego fui successor Petri. Between Siestri and Chiavari flows down a fair large river, and from its name the title of my race makes its boast. One month and little more I proved how the great mantle weighs on

Chi fosti, e perchè volti avete i dossi
Al su mi di', e se vuoi ch' io t' impettri
Cosa di là ond' io vivendo mossi.

Ed egli a me: Perchè i nostri diretri
Rivolga il cielo a sè, saprai: ma prima
Scias, quod ego fui successor Petri.
Intra Siestri e Chiaveri s' adima
Una humana bella, e del suo nome
Lo titol del mio sangue fa sua cima.
Un mese e poco più prova' io come

1 quot ego sumfui 145.

"Know that I was a successor of Peter." This is Pope Adrian V., formerly Cardinal Ottobuono da' Fieschi of Genoa. He became Pope on July 12, 1276, and held the office thirty-nine days.—Villani vii. 50. He is interesting to Englishmen as having, in the capacity of papal legate, taken a share in the restoration of peace after the Barons' War, and preached the crusade of 1270 in this country. He must be distinguished from his namesake and kinsman, who, as Pope Innocent IV., reigned from 1241 to 1252, and excommunicated Frederick II.

100 The Lavagna, from which the Fieschi took the title of Counts. The railway from Genoa to Spezia crosses it just beyond Chiavari.

100 Blanc, with most commentators, takes cima as "origin." Both Bianchi and Philalethes, however, prefer the interpretation which I have followed, and which agrees with the Tuscan use of cima, as given by Fanfani: "il più alto grado di alcuna cosa."
him who guards it from the mire, that all other burthens seem feathers. My conversion, ah me! was late; but when I became Roman pastor, thus I discovered that life was false. I saw that there the heart quieted not itself, nor could one mount any higher in that life; wherefore of this a love was kindled in me. Up to that point, I was a soul wretched and separated from God, wholly avaricious; now as thou seest, here I am punished for it. What avarice does is here displayed in the purging of the converted souls, and the mount has no more bitter penalty. Just as our eye did

Pesa il gran manto a chi dal fango il guarda:
Che piuma sembran tutte l’ altre some.
La mia conversione oimè! fu tarda;
Ma come fatto fui Roman Pastore,
Così scoperì la vita bugiarda.
Vidi che lì non si quetava il cuore,
Nè più salì poteasi in quella vita;
Perché di questa in me s’accese amore.
Fino a quel punto misera e partita
Da Dio anima fui, del tutto avara:
Or, come vedi, qui ne son punita.
Quel ch’ avarizia fa, qui si dichiara,
In purgazion dell’ anime converse:
E nulla pena il monte ha più amara.

k non posava Gg.

104 il gran manto; so Inf. xix. 69.
114 The feminine punita agrees of course with anima, though a man is speaking.
117 This line is worthy of attention, as showing that there is not, as is sometimes said, any regular gradation of penalties in Purgatory, like that of the torments in Hell. Also, as Philalethes points out, the discipline is sometimes imitative of the sin, as here and in the third and seventh circles; sometimes, as in the cases of pride, gluttony, and sloth, opposed to it.
not erect itself on high, being fixed to earthly things, so justice here has sunk it to earth. As avarice extinguished our love toward every good, whence labour was lost, so justice here holds us straitly bound and prisoners in feet and hands; and as long as it shall be the pleasure of the righteous Lord, so long shall we stay immovable and out-stretched." I had knelt down, and was in mind to speak; but when I began, and he was aware, only by hearing, of my reverence: "What occasion," said he, "has so bent thee down?" And I to him: "For your dignity my conscience rightly pricked me." "Make straight thy legs, and rise up, brother," he answered; "err not. I am a fellow-servant

Si come l' occhio nostro non s' aderse
   In alto, fisso alle cose terrene,
   Cosi giustizia qui a terra il merse.  120
Come avarizia spense a ciascun bene
   Lo nostro amore, onde operar perdèsi,
   Cosi giustizia qui strettì ne tiene
Ne' piedi e nelle man legati e presi;
   E quanto fia piacer del giusto Sire,
   Tanto staremo immobili e distesi.
Io m' era inginocchiato, e volea dire:
   Ma com' io cominciai, ed ei s' accorse,
   Solo ascoltando, del mio riverire,
Qual cagion, disse, in giù cosi ti torse?
   Ed io a lui: Per vostra dignitate,
   Mia coscienza dritto mi rimorse.  130
Drizza le gambe, e levati su, frate,
   Rispose: non errar; conservo sono

1 dritta Gg. 23 Ald. Land.

134, 135 Imitated from Rev. xix. 10, and xxii. 9.
with thee and with the others unto one power. If thou hast ever understood that holy note of the Gospel which says Neque nubent, well mayest thou see why I speak thus. Now go thy way; I will not that thou stay more, for thy stay disturbs my weeping, wherewith I ripen that which thou hast said. A niece have I yonder, who has to name Alagia, good of herself, so only that our house make her not by example wicked; and she alone yonder remains to me."

Teco e con gli altri ad una potestate.
Se mai quel santo Evangelico suono,
Che dice Neque nubent, intendesti,\(^m\)
Ben puoi veder perch’io così ragiono.
Vattene omai: non vo’ che più t’arresti:
Che la tua stanza mio pianger disagia,
Col qual maturo ciò che tu dicesti.
Nipote ho io di là, ch’ha nome Alagia;
Buona da sè, pur che la nostra casa
Non faccia lei per esempio malvagia;
E questa sola m’è di là rimasa.

\(^m\) nunquam n. Gg.

---

137 Matt. xxii. 20. The meaning here is that earthly distinctions of whatever kind are done away with in the next life.

139 Vattene omai. Cf. xiv. 124.

142 Cf. L. 92.

143 This Alagia is said to have been married to Moroello Malaspina.

145 Not that he had no other relations, but she was the only one whose prayers would avail him.
CANTO XX.

ARGUMENT.

As they go forward they hear a voice proclaiming instances of liberality. This is that of Hugh Capet, who speaks of the evils wrought through avarice by the house of France; and tells how at night the spirits cry out against famous examples of this vice. Of a sudden, the whole mountain shakes, and all the spirits glorify God.

Against a better will, a will fights badly; wherefore against my own pleasure, to please him, I drew from the water the sponge unfilled. I moved myself, and my Leader himself by the unencumbered places, ever along the rock, as one goes along a wall close to the battlements; for the folk who are pouring drop by drop through their eyes the contra miglior voler, voler mal pugna;

Onde contra il piacer mio, per piacerli,
Trassi dell’ acqua non sazia la spugna.

Mossimi, e il Duca mio si mosse per li
Luoghi spediti pur lungo la roccia,
Come si va per muro stretto a’ merli:
Chè la gente che fonde a goccia a goccia

\[a \text{ voler mio } Gg. \quad b \text{ la pugna Cass.}\] evil which possesses all the world, in the other direction approach too near the outer side. Accursed be thou, ancient she-wolf, that more than all the other beasts hast prey, through thy hunger endlessly deep! O stars, in whose turning it seems men believe that the conditions of this lower world are transmuted, when will he come through whom she will depart?

We were going with slow steps and few, and I intent upon the shades which I heard piteously weep and bewail themselves, and by adventure I heard one cry “Sweet

Per gli occhi il mal che tutto il mondo occupa,
Dall' altra parte in fuor troppo s' approccià.
Maledetta sie tu, antica lupa,
Che più che tutte l' altre bestie hai preda,
Per la tua fame senza fine cupa.
O ciel, nel cui girar par che si creda
Le condizion di quaggiù trasmutarsi,
Quando verrà per cui questa disceda?
Noi andavam co' passi lenti e scarsi;
Ed io attento all' ombre ch' i' sentia
Pietosamente piangere e lagnarsi;
E per ventura udi’: Dolce Maria,

10 lupa. The wolf in the D.C. denotes (1) the sin of avarice; (2) the Guelf party; (3) as connected with the last, the Papal power and ‘‘clericalism’’ generally. Notice that the first soul whom Dante meets in this circle is a Pope, and cf. Inf. vii. 46-48. Also notice that Plutus, who is on guard over the avaricious in hell, is called by Virgil, “Maledetto lupo.” How far the Guelf party, as a whole, can be connected otherwise than through their name with the sin which the wolf denotes, it is impossible to say; but it may be remarked that the trading classes for the most part held to it. That there is a secondary reference to it here, and in Inf. i., is clear from a comparison of the next three lines, 13-15 with Inf. i. 101 sqq.

13 ciel, as in xvi. 67, etc.
Mary,” in front of us, in its wail just as a woman does who is in travail, and continue: “So poor wast thou, as one may see by that hostelry where thou laidest down thy sacred burthen.” Following this I heard: “O good Fabricius, thou wouldest rather virtue with poverty than to possess great riches with crime.” These words were so pleasing to me, that I drew myself further to have acquaintance of that spirit from whom they seemed to have come. It was yet speaking of the largess which Nicholas made to the maidens, to bring their youth to honour. “O soul, that

Dinanzi a noi chiamar cos’ nel pianto,
Come fa donna, che in partorir sia;
E seguitar: Povera fosti tanto,
Quanto veder si può per quell’ ospizio,
Ove sponesti il tuo portato santo.
Segueemente intesi: O buon Fabbrizio,
Con povertà volesti anzi virtute,
Che gran ricchezza posseder con vizio.
Queste parole m’ eran si piaciute,
Ch’ io mi trassì oltre per aver contezza
Di quello spirto, onde parean venute.
Esso parlava ancor della larghezza,
Che fece Niccolao alle pulcelle,
Per condurre ad onor lor giovinezza.

25 Cf. Cony. iv. 5. “Chi dirà che fosse sanza divina spirazione. Fabrizio infinita quasi multitudine d’oro rifiutare, per non volere abbandonare sua patria?” He is also commemorated in De Mon. ii. 5. The story is told in Val. Max. iv. 3, § 6, where he is called “honoribus et auctoritate omni cive temporibus suis major, censu par unicuique pauperrimo.”

25 St. Nicholas, Bishop of Myra, dowered three girls, who would otherwise have been brought up to an immoral life.
talkest so well, tell me who thou wast," I said, "and wherefore thou alone renewest these worthy praises? Thy speech shall not be without reward, if I return to fulfil the short journey of that life which flies to its end." And he: "I will tell thee, not for any help which I may expect from thence, but because so great grace shines in thee ere thou art dead. I was root of the ill plant, which overshadows

O anima, che tanto ben favelle,
Dimmi chi fosti, dissì, e perché sola
Tu queste degne lode rinnovelle?
Non sia senza mercè la tua parola,
S' io ritorno a compier lo cammin corto
Di quella vita ch' al termine volta.
Ed egli: io ti dirò, non per conforto
Ch' io attenda di là, ma perché tanta
Grazia in te luce prima che sii morto.
Io fui radice della mala pianta,

\[ se \text{ mai torno Cass. } \quad \text{d anzi che s. Gg.} \]

Dante has probably fallen into two confusions in this well-known passage. The speaker calls himself Hugh Capet, but implies in l. 59 that he himself was never crowned, and also calls himself son of a butcher, according to the legend to which Villon refers: "Hue Capet, qui fut estrait de boucherie." Now in the version given by Villani (iv. 4), who has the same story of the origin of the family, it was Hugh the Great who was "stratto di nazione di buccieri;" and having married the widow of the Duke of Orleans (sic), became duke himself. Thus Dante has apparently mixed up the father and the son, just as in l. 54 the allusion to Childeric, the last of the Merwings, can hardly be doubted. None of the later Karlings is known to have turned monk —(and this is the only explanation at all satisfactory of "renduto in panni bigi")—whereas Villani mentions that Childeric "rendesi monaco" (ii. 12). Moreover, "li antichi regi" is more applicable to the Merwings, all Christendom in such wise that good fruit is rarely plucked from it. But if Douai, Ghent, Lille, and Bruges had the power, soon would there be vengeance taken on it, and I ask it of him who judges all. I was called there Hugh Capet; of me are born the Philips and the Lewises, by whom of late France has been ruled. Son was I of a butcher of Paris. When the ancient kings came to an end, all save one who had betaken himself to gray garments, I found so fast within my hands the rein of the government

Che la terra cristiana tutte aduggia
Sl che buon frutto rado se ne schianta.
Ma se Doagio, Guanto, Lilla, e Bruggia
Potesser, tosto ne saria vendetta:
Ed io la cheggio a lui che tutto giuggia.
Chiamato fui di là Ugo Ciapetta:
Di me son nati i Filippi e i Luigi,
Per cui novellamente è Francia retta.
Figliuol fui d' un beccaio di Parigi.
Quando li Regi antichi venner meno
Tutti, fuor ch' un renduto in panni bigi,
Trova' mi stretto nelle mani il freno
Del governo del regno, e tanta possa whose origin was lost in a fabulous antiquity, than to the more recent Karlings. It must be remembered that Hugh Capet had been dead three hundred years, and that trustworthy histories did not exist. Even Villani, professed historian as he is, is often quite at sea as to events which happened before his own time.

45 In allusion to the treatment of Flanders and its count by Philip the Fair. The revenge came in 1301, when a massacre of the French took place, which was followed by the battle at Courtrai, called the Battle of the Spurs, March 21, 1302.—Villani viii. 55, 56.
of the kingdom, and such power of new acquirement, and so full of friends, that to the widowed crown was the head of my son promoted, from which began of these the consecrated bones. So long as the great dowry of Provence took not shame away from my race, it had little worth, but still it did not evil. There began with violence and with falsehood its rapine; and afterward, for amends, it took Ponthieu

Di nuovo acquisto, è sl d' amici pieno,
Ch' alla corona vedova promossa
La testa di mio figlio fu, dal quale
Cominciari di costor le sacrate ossa. 60
Mentre che la gran dote Provenzale
Al sangue mio non tolse la vergogna,
Poco valea, ma pur non facea male.
Lì cominciò con forza e con menzogna
La sua rapina: e poscia per ammenda
Ponti e Normandia prese, e Guascogna.

57 The construction of sl d' amici pieno is rather harsh. It must be explained by supposing that trova' mi is to be repeated in the sense of "I found myself;" mi being me, not miki as in l. 55.
60 Lombardi and others take sacrate as "accursed," which seems weak.
61 In allusion to the marriages of Louis IX. and Charles of Anjou with Blanche and Beatrice, daughters of Raymond Berenger, Count of Provence. Between them they brought the county to the crown of France; and it is said to have been owing to the wish of his wife to be a queen, as well as her sisters, that Charles accepted the crown of Apulia, and became the champion of the Pope against the House of Swabia. —Villani vi. 89. It must be remembered that Dante is only concerned with foreign powers as they affect Italy.
66 There is some confusion of chronology in these lines, for no attempt to take Ponthieu from the English crown seems to have been made till 1324 (Henry of Blaneforde, Chronicle, ad fin.), and it was in English hands for some years later, while Normandy was lost in the and Normandy and Gascony. Charles came into Italy, and for amends made a victim of Conradin; and then forced Thomas back to Heaven, for amends. I see a time not long after this day, which draws another Charles forth

Carlo venne in Italia, e per ammenda
Vittima fe’ di Curradino; e poi Ripinse al Ciel Tommaso, per ammenda.
Tempo vegg’ io non molto dopo ancoi, reign of John, 1203 (Villani iv. 4), and thus long before the “dote Provenzale” existed. It may be said, however, that the claim of the English king on Normandy was not renounced till early in the reign of Philip the Fair. The attempt on Gascony, to which Dante specially refers, is probably that of Philip, in 1294 (Villani viii. 4); but there was also an inroad fifty years before in that direction, when the English were defeated at Saintes, by Louis IX., which ultimately led to the acquisition of Poitou. Is it possible that Paitò and not Ponti is the right reading? See Cary’s note to this passage. Villani, however (xii. 63), in narrating Edward III.’s first invasion of France, makes him lay claim to “Ponti, “ “Normandia,” and “Guascogna.” As to Dante’s opinion of St. Louis, see note to vii. 128.

Charles of Anjou came into Italy in 1265, at the invitation of the Popes Urban IV. and Clement IV., to take the crowns of Apulia and Sicily, and overthrow the house of Swabia. He defeated and slew Manfred at Benevento, in February 1268, and his nephew, Conradin, at Tagliacozzo in August, 1268. (See Villani vi. 87, and the first part of book vii. It should be noticed that Villani gives a very different picture of Charles to that usually accepted. See also note to Canto vii. 113.) The story that St. Thomas Aquinas was poisoned by his order seems to rest on no evidence beyond the merest suspicion. The only certain fact is that Aquinas died at Fossa Nova in Campania in 1274, on his way to the Council of Lyons. A knight according to the Ottimo, a physician according to Villani (ix. 218) gave him poison, “thinking to please the king,” to whom he was supposed to be obnoxious—probably on political grounds.
CANTO XX.

from France, to make him and his better known. Without arms he goes forth thence, and only with the lance where-with Judas jousted; and that he pushes so that he makes the paunch of Florence to burst. Therefrom not land, but sin and shame will he gain, for himself so much the more grievous as he counts light the like harm. The other who has already gone a prisoner out of his ship, I see sell his

Che tragge un altro Carlo fuor di Francia,
Per far conoscer meglio e sè e i suoi.
Senz' arme n' esce, e solo con la lancia;
Con la qual giostrò Giuda; e quella ponta
Si ch' a Fiorenza fa scoppiar la pancia.
Quindi non terra, ma peccato ed onta
Guadagnerà, per sè tanto più grave,
Quanto più lieve simil danno conta.
L' altro, che già usci preso di nave,

e esce solo e 3 W.

77 un altro Carlo. Charles of Valois, brother of Philip the Fair, called in Italy “Carlo sanza Terra” (cf. l. 76), was summoned by Boniface VIII. in the year 1300, says Villani (viii. 43): “per doppio intendimento: principalmente per aiuto del re Carlo (II. of Apulia) per la guerra di Cicilia; . . . e oltre a questo gli diè titolo di paciario in Toscana, per recare colla sua forza la città di Firenze al suo intendimento.” He entered Florence on All Saints’ Day of the following year, and took the side of the Black party, after promising to pacify the factions. In the next April the Whites were driven out: “onde alla nostra città di Firenze seguirono molte rovine e pericoli,” admits the Guelf historian. He passed on to Sicily, made peace, unknown to Charles II., with Don Frederick, and returned to France in the following November, “scemata e consumata sua gente e con poco onore.”

79 L’altro. Charles II. of Apulia was defeated off Naples by Roger di Loria, June 5, 1284, shortly before his father’s death. His life was only spared at the request of the Queen of Aragon, Constance.
daughter, and bargain over her, as do the corsairs with the other slaves. O avarice, what canst thou do more with us, since thou hast so drawn my race to thee that it cares not for its own flesh! In order that the future evil and the past may appear less, I see the fleur-de-lys enter into Alagna, and in his Vicar Christ himself made captive. I see him being mocked a second time, I see the vinegar and the gall renewed, and him between new thieves put to

Veggio vender sua figlia, e patteggiarne,
Come fan li corsar dell' altre schiave.
O avarizia, che puoi tu più farne,
Poi ch' hai il sangue moii a te si tratto,
Che non si cura della propria carne?
Perchè men paia il mal futuro e il fatto
Veggio in Alagna entrar lo fiordaliso,
E nel vicario suo Cristo esser cattò.
Veggio uno' altra volta esser deriso:
Veggio rinnovellar l' aceto e il fele,
E tra nuovi ladroni essere anciso.

80

vivi Cass. Gg. W. etc.

daugher of Manfred, and he was detained in Aragon till November, 1288.—Vill. vii. 93, 125, etc. His daughter was married to Azzo III. da Este of Ferrara, in 1305, according to Philalethes. Villani mentions the marriage, but says nothing of the alleged money transaction.

86 In September, 1303, Sciarra Colonna and William de Nogaret (minister of Philip the Fair) seized and imprisoned Boniface VIII. at Anagni. He was treated with every sort of indignity, and died in a few days after his release, on October 12.—Villani viii. 63, where Dante’s expressions are curiously paralleled.

89 Of course aceto and fele are strictly the object of rinnovellar.

90 vivi ladron is the more usual reading; but nuovi, which Bianchi and Fraticelli prefer, seems to make so very much the best sense that I have ventured to go against the balance of authority. Ottimo takes ladroni to mean the cardinals: “perocchè rubano tutto il mondo.”
death. I see the new Pilate so cruel that that sates him not, but without decree he bears into the temple his greedy sails. O my Lord, when shall I rejoice to see thy vengeance, which makes sweet thy wrath, hidden in thy secret place? That which I was saying of that only spouse of the Holy Spirit, and which made thee turn toward me for some gloss, is ordered for all our prayers, so long as the Veggio il nuovo Pilato sì crudele;

Che ciò nol sazia, ma senza decreto
Porta nel tempio le cupide vele:
O Signor mio, quando sarò io lieto,
A veder la vendetta, che nascosa
Fa dolce l' ira tua nel tuo segreto?
Ciò ch' io dicea di quell' unica sposa.
Dello Spirito Santo, e che ti fece
Verso me volger per alcuna chiosa,
Tant' è disposto a tutte nostre prece,

91-93 Alluding to the destruction of the Templars by Philip the Fair in 1307 and the following years. It is not easy to see what Dante means by "senza decreto," as Philip was acting, at least ostensibly, with the Pope's authority. See Vellutello viii. 92. Probably Benvenuto's explanation, "vult dicere injuste," is all that is needed.

96 Bianchi takes this to mean that the certainty of God's vengeance enables his anger to cool; or, as Blanc puts it, prevents it breaking out before the time. Philalethes prefers to interpret "the justice of God, knowing that its vengeance is inevitable, is content to wait." I am inclined for once to prefer Vellutello's explanation: "Per esser dolce cosa a giusti veder punir gl' impii de le sceleragginj loro." The allusion to Ps. lviii. 9 seems clear. With nascosa and segreto cf. arcamente giusto xxix. 120. Cf. also S. T. Suppl. Q. 94, A. 3. "Hoc modo (sc. per accidentes) sancti de poenis impiorum gaudebunt, considerando in eis divinae justitiae ordinem."

97 This is an answer to Dante's question in l. 35, referring to l. 19.
day lasts, but when it grows night, we take instead thereof a contrary sound. We recall Pygmalion then, whom his will, glutinous of gold, made traitor and robber and parricide; and the misery of the avaricious Midas, which followed his greedy demand, for the which it ever behoves that men laugh. Of the foolish Achan each then bethinks himself, how he stole the spoils, so that the wrath of Joshua seems here still to bite him. Then we accuse Sapphira with her husband; we praise the kicks which Heliodorus had; and in insamy circles all the mount Polymnestor who slew Polydorus. Lastly, our cry is

Quanto il di dura: ma quando s’annotta,
Contrario suon prendemo in quella vece.
Noi ripetiam Pigmalion allotta,
Cui traditore e ladro e patricida
Fece la voglia sua dell’ oro ghiotta:
E la miseria dell’ avaro Mida,
Che segui alla sua dimanda ingorda,
Per la qual sempre convien che si rida.
Del folle Acâm ciascun poi si ricorda,
Come furò le spoglie, si che l’ ira
Di Giosuè qui par ch’ ancor lo morda.
Indi accusiam col marito Safira:
Lodiamo i calci ch’ ebbe Eliodoro,
Ed in infamia tutto il monte gira
Polinestor ch’ ancise Polidoro:
Ultimamente ci si grida: Crasso,

108 in quella vece for “in v. di quello.”
109 Pygmalion. Æn i. 347. The other instances of avarice, or rather lust of wealth, are all familiar. The story of Heliodorus is in
2 Macca. iii.
“Crassus, tell us, for thou knowest, of what savour is gold?” Sometimes we talk one loud and another low, according to the affection which spurs us in speaking, now to a greater now to a lesser pace. Wherefore, in regard to the good which by day is talked of among us, I was not erewhile alone; but here no other person was raising his voice hard by.”

We were already parted from him, and were striving to overcome the way, so far as was permitted to our power, when I felt the mount totter as a thing which falls; wherefore a chill seized me, such as is wont to seize him who goes to death. Certes Delos was not so mightily

Dicci, che il sai, di che sapore è l’ oro.
Talor parliam l’ un alto, e l’ altro basso,
Secondo l’ affezion ch’ a dir ci sprona
Ora a maggior, ed ora a minor passo.

Però al ben, che il di ci si ragiona,
Dianzi non er’ io sol: ma qui da presso
Non alzava la voce altra persona.
Noi eravam partiti già da esso,
E brigavam di soverchiar la strada
Tanto, quanto al poter n’ era permesso;
Quand’ io senti’, come cosa che cada,
Tremar lo monte: onde mi prese un gielo,
Qual prender suol colui ch’ a morte vada.

Certo non si scotea si forte Delo,
Pria che Latona in lei facesse il nido,

Answering the second question in l. 35.

cada and vada. For this use of the subj. cf. viii. 6, xviii. 78, etc. It is not, however, so purely imaginary a simile as the second of these.

This seems simply to refer to the tossing that the island of Delos may be supposed to have undergone before the filial piety of Apollo fixed it.
shaken before that Leda made in it the nest to bring forth the two eyes of the heaven. Then began from all parts a cry such that the Master turned him to me, saying: "Doubt not, while I guide thee." "Gloria in excelsis Deo," all were saying, by what I understood from those near, from whence one might distinguish the cry. We rested motionless and surprised, like the shepherds who first heard that chant, until the trembling ceased, and it was finished. Then we took again our sacred way, looking at the shades which lay upon the earth, returned already to their wonted

A partorir li due occhi del cielo.
Poi cominciò da tutte parti un grido
    Tal, che il Maestro inver di me si feo,
    Dicendo: Non dubbiar mentr'io ti guido.

Gloria in excelsis tutti Deo

    Dicean, per quel ch'io da' vicin compresi,
    Onde intender lo grido si poteo.
Noi ci restammo immobili e sospesi,

    Come i pastor che prima udir quel canto,
    Fin che il tremar cessò, ed ei compièsi.\h
Poi ripigliammo nostro cammin santo,

    Guardando l'ombre che giacean per terra.
    Tornate già in su l'usato pianto.
Nulla ignoranza mai con tanta guerra

\h io compresi Gg. io 'l compr. Cass. 124.

\l It seems better to read da' vicin, as "to hear close by," which would be the meaning of da' vicin, is not quite the same sense as "to hear from those close by," and it is the latter that Dante means. Post. Gg. has "i.e. spiritus."

\l\l per terra. Cf. Fr. par terre.
plaint. No ignorance ever with such striving made me desirous to know, if my memory in that matter errs not, as that which I seemed then in my thought to have:
neither, for our haste, did I dare to ask, nor of myself could I see aught there. Thus I went my way timid and full of thought.

Mi fe' desideroso di sapere,
Se la memoria mia in ciò non erra,
Quanta pareami allor pensando avere:
Nè per la fretta dimandare er' oso,
Nè per me lì potea cosa vedere. 150
Così m' andava timido e pensoso.
CANTO XXI.

ARGUMENT.

They are overtaken by a spirit, who, having completed his purification, is on his way upwards. He explains the reason for which the mountain shook, and the manner in which the souls know that they are free to mount upwards. Being asked his name, he declares himself to be Statius the poet, and Dante reveals to him who Virgil is.

The natural thirst which is never sated, if not with the water, the grace whereof the woman of Samaria asked, was working upon me, and haste was urging me along the

La sete natural che mai non sazia,
Se non coll’ acqua onde la femminetta
Sammaritana dimandò la grazia,
Mi travagliava, e pungeami la fretta. ¹

¹ porgeami Gg.

¹ N.B. sazia used intransitively. For the figure, cf. Conv. i. 1, where “la natural sete” is used to denote the desire of knowledge. Here it is of course the desire to know the reason why the mountain quaked.

² onde exactly = Fr. dont. So xi. 112, xxxii. 102, etc. It will be observed that while the pronominal meaning is alone retained in French, the adverbial is far the more usual in Italian. See Corticelli, Lingua Toscana, p. 79.
impeded way behind my Leader, and I was full of compassion at the just vengeance. And lo, just as Luke writes of it, how Christ appeared to the two that were in the way, already risen forth from the hole of the tomb, to us appeared a shade, and it was coming behind us, regarding at its feet the prostrate crowd; nor took we note of it, so it spoke first, saying: “My brethren, God give you peace.” We turned on a sudden, and Virgil gave back to him the sign which befits that. Then he began: “May the true

Per la impacciata via retro al mio Duca,
E condolièmi alla giusta vendetta.\(^b\)
Ed ecco, sì come ne scrive Luca,
Che Cristo apparve ai due, ch’erano in via,
Già surto fuor della sepolcral buca,
Ci apparve un’ombra, e dietro a noi venia,
Dappiè guardando la turba che giace;
N’è ci addemmo di lei, sì parlò pria,
Dicepido: Frati miei, Dio vi dea pace.
Noi ci volgemmo subito, e Virgilio
Rendè lui il cenno, ch’è ciò si conface.

\(^b\) condolezmi 3 \textit{W.}; conduceami 2; conducemi 14.

\(^6\) condolièmi. For the form, cf. \textit{movievo x. 81}, and see Diez ii. 130.

\(^7\) \textit{ne} may be also taken in its frequent sense as dat. of \textit{noi}, “writes for us.”

\(^8\) Notice the present \textit{giace}, as elsewhere, when he is referring to a permanent feature.

court which banishes me in eternal exile, set thee in peace within the blessed council.” “How?” said he (and we were going stoutly the while) “if ye are shades that God on high deems not worthy, who has escorted you thus far along his stair?” And my Teacher: “If thou regard the marks that this man carries, and that the Angel draws, thou wilt well see that it behoves that he reign with the good.

Poi cominciò: Nel beato concilio
   Ti ponga in pace la verace corte,
   Che me rilega nell’ eterno esilio.

Come, diss’ egli, e parte andavam forte, c
   Se voi siete ombre che Dio su non debni,
   Chi v’ ha per la sua scala tanto scorte?

E il Dottor mio: Se tu riguardi i segni
   Che questi porta e che l’ Angel profila,
   Ben vedrai che co’ buon convien ch’ ei regni.

\[ \text{c andavan Gg. 3; egli, perché andava Ald. (1); e perché andate, Ald. (2);} \]
\[ \text{Land.} \]

\[ 17 \text{ la verace corte. Cf. xxxi. 41. Par. vii. 51.} \]
\[ 19 \text{ If the reading perché be taken, the words of course form part of} \] \[ \text{Statius’s question. On the other hand the first five editions have parte} \]
\[ \text{andavam, or andavan (this perhaps a misprint), and the parenthetic} \]
\[ \text{remark is quite in Dante’s style, and adds much to the picture, cf.} \]
\[ \text{andavamo introcque, Inf. xx. 130. Parte for “intanto” is a frequent} \]
\[ \text{Tuscan idiom. It occurs, for instance, Inf. xxix. 16, and Petrarch} \]
\[ \text{Son. cccii. See Fanfani and Corticelli, s.v. Post. Cass. “i.e. interim.”} \]
\[ 20 \text{ degha. digno and dignor are not unfrequent in this sense, but} \] \[ \text{usually, or always, have a qualifying ablative, as “non equidem tali} \] \[ \text{me dignor honore.” There is, however, an instance of digno with} \] \[ \text{infinitive in Lucr. v. 51. I do not think Bianchi’s explanation of su} \]
\[ \text{degha as = “degni di ricever su,” though supported by Landino’s} \] \[ \text{degne di star in cielo,” is consistent with grammar. Dehna, in fact, is} \]
\[ \text{exactly the opposite of sdehna.} \]
But since she who spins night and day had not yet drawn for him the skein which Cloto puts on for each man and packs together, his soul, which is sister to thine and mine, coming up could not come alone, because it beholds not after our fashion; wherefore I was drawn forth from the ample throat of Hell to show him, and I shall show him further as far as my schooling may bring him. But tell us, if thou knowest, wherefore the mountain gave erewhile such shudders, and wherefore all at once appeared to cry as far as its soft base?” Thus questioning pierced he for me

Ma perché lei, che di e notte fila,
Non gli aveva tratta ancora la conoscchia,
Che Cloto impone a ciascuno e compila;
L’anima sua, ch’è tua e mia sicroccia,
Venendo su non potea venir sola,
Peroch’al nostro modo non adocchia; e
Ond’io fui tratto fuor dell’ampia gola
D’inferno per mostrarli, e mostreroli
Oltre, quanto il potrà menar mia scuola.
Ma dinne, se tu sai, perché t’ai crolli
Diè dianzi il monte, e perché tutti ad una Parver gridare infino a’ suoi pie mollì?

\[d \text{ per colei Cass. 1234; po’ colei Bi. ; di con notte Gg.}
\]
\[nostro mondo Gg. \]
\[\text{tutto (alt. to tutti) Gg. ; tutta Cass.}
\]
\[\text{parve Gg. 145 ; gradir 1245.}
\]

\[\text{colei. Lachesis ; cf. xxv. 79. Bianchi’s reading ‘po’ is, of course,}
\]
\[\text{for ‘poi, taken as in x. 1.}
\]
\[\text{compila. “Compone distribuendo a ciascuno . . . stame}
\]
\[\text{Vellutello; “ristringle, girandole in torno” Bianchi; “riunire, adattare}
\]
\[\text{Blanc; “umwickelt” Philalethes.}
\]
\[\text{dianzi. So xx. 122.}
\]
through the needle's eye of my desire, so that, only with hope, my thirst became less craving.

That one began: "Thing is there none which without order the religion of the mountain feels, or which is beyond wont. This place is free from every alteration; occasion may arise by reason of one whom the heaven is of itself receiving into itself, but not of aught else; because not rain, not hail, not snow, not dew, not hoar-frost falls any higher than the short stairway of three steps. Clouds

Si mi diè dimandando per la cruna
Del mio disio, che pur con la speranza
Si sefe la mia sete men digiuna.
Quei cominciò: Cosa non è che sanza
Ordine senta la religione
Della montagna, o che sia fuor d' usanza.
Libero è qui da ogni alterazione:
Di quel che il ciel in sè da sè riceve,
Esserci puote, e non d' altro, cagione.\(^h\)
Perchè non pioggia, non grando, non neve,
Non rugiada, non brina più su cade,\(^i\)
Che la scalaetta dei tre gradi breve.
Nuvole spesse non paion nè rade.

\(^h\) altra cag. Cass. 14 Bi.
\(^i\) bruma Gg.

37 mi diè per la cruna, cf. "nel petto mi diedi" ix. iii. "dar per la fronte" xxiv. 148.
42 religione, "ritual" or "rule," much as in Par. xi. 93.
43 Bianchi notices the use of qui as = questo luogo. Cf. xii. 55.
45 altro appears to have the weight of authority, though altra, which Bianchi and Philalethes adopt, is perhaps the easier reading. I doubt the latter's interpretation of da sè in l. 44 as = "from it," i.e. the mountain; for though, as he says, sui, etc. often lose their reflexive force in late Latin and the derived languages, the transition here is too harsh. There seems no objection to Vellutello's explanation: "Il cielo, cioè Iddio, mosso da sè."
appear not dense or rare, nor lightning-flash, nor Thaumas’s dughter, who yonder often changes quarters. Dry vapour advances no further upward than to the highest of the three steps which I said, where the vicar of Peter has his feet.
It quakes perhaps lower down little or much; but by reason of wind which is hidden (I know not how) in the earth, up here it has quaked never; it quakes here when

Nè corruscar, nè figlia di Taumante,
Che di là cangia sovente contrade.
Secco vapor non surge più avante,
Ch’ al sommo dei tre gradi ch’ io parlai,
Ov’ ha il Vicario di Pietro le piante.\textsuperscript{k}
Trema forse più giù poco od assai:
Ma, per vento che in terra si nasconda,\textsuperscript{l}
Non so come, quassù non tremò mai:
Tremaci quando alcuna anima monda

\textsuperscript{k} Dov’ il vic. . . . ha le Gg.  \textsuperscript{l} nasconda? Gg.
\textsuperscript{m} non so come. e . . . mai? Gg.

\textsuperscript{50} \textsuperscript{51} Thaumas’s daughter = Iris. The rainbow of course changes its position with the sun. contrada seems here to have its proper force, of a district lying over against the observer; like Germ. gegend, of which it was probably a translation; di là i.e. of course, as usual “on the earth.” The symbolical meaning of this passage is that earthly passions are here extinct.

\textsuperscript{52} secco vapor. Probably only the wind—ἡ ἔηρα ἀναθυμίασις tων πνευμάτων ἄρχη καὶ φύσις πάντων. Ar. Met. iv. 4—but the view that shooting-stars are intended receives some support from v. 37. Cf.
xxviii. 97-102.

\textsuperscript{56} δει νοεῖν ὅτι . . . τρόμων καὶ σφιγμῶν αἰτίων ἐστὶν ἡ τοῦ πνεύματος ἐναπολαμβανομένου δύναμις. Id. iv. 8.

\textsuperscript{57} non so come, almost = Lat. “nescio quomodo.” Cf. ii. 23, xxiv. 37.
any soul feels itself so pure that it rises or that it moves to mount up; and such a cry speeds it. Of its purity, its sole volition makes proof, which wholly free to change its company, seizes the soul and aids it with will. It wills indeed at first; but that impulse allows it not, which divine justice sets against will, as it was [formerly] toward sin, [so

Si sente, sì che surga, o che si muova
Per salir su, e tal grido seconda.
Della mondizia il sol voler fa pruova,
Che tutto libero a mutar convento.
L’ alma sorprende, e di voler le giova.
Prima vuol ben : ma non lascia il talento,
Chè divina giustizia contra voglia,
Come fu al peccar, pone al tormento.

9 m. suo voler Cass.; sol voler Gg. W. De la immond. solver si fa nova 2 ; mond. solver si fa 1345.
10 tutta libera 23 W.

63 di voler le giova. “Am Wollen Freud’ ihr gebend.”—Philalethes. But is not giorare in this sense always impersonal? I have followed Blanc.

64 Philalethes explains this passage by a reference to Aquinas’s doctrine (S.T. Suppl. Q. 100, Art. 4), of an absolute and a conditioned will, the germ of which may be found in Ar. Eth. iii. 4. The absolute will (voglia) tends towards virtue in this world and happiness in the next; but the conditioned (talento), by which men bear present apparent pain for the sake of good to follow (“sicut ustio est voluntaria propter sanitatem consequendam”) is made the means in the next world of purgation, by disposing the soul to suffer until it is purified. It is a kind of perversion of this which makes men sin in spite of consequences. Talento has of course here, as in Inf. v. 39, x. 55, and in the sonnet beginning “Guido vorrei,” its original meaning of a weight in the balance (τάλαμον), hence an impulse or desire.” So Bocc. ii. 9: “M’è venuto in talento.” The modern meaning of “talent,” arising from the parable, is comparatively recent. It seems to date from the fifteenth century in English, and does not appear in French till the seventeenth.
now] toward the torment. And I, who have lain in this woe five hundred years and more, have but now felt a free will for a better threshold. Wherefore thou didst feel the earthquake, and hear the pious spirits throughout the mount render praise to that Lord, by whom may they soon be led upward." Thus said he to him; and because one delights in drinking in proportion as one's thirst is great, I should not skill to say how great benefit he did me. And my sage Leader: "Now I see the net which holds you here, and how the snare is broken; wherefore it quakes here, and whereof ye rejoice together. Now please it thee that I know who thou wast, and that I understand in thy words wherefore thou hast lain so many ages here." "At the time that the good Titus, with the aid of

Ed io che son giaciuto a questa doglia
Cinquecento anni e più, pur mo sentii
Libera volontà di miglior soglia.
Però sentisti il tremoto, e li pii
Spiriti per lo monte render lode
A quel Signor, che tosto su gl' invii.
Così gli disse: e però che si gode
Tanto del ber quant' è grande la sete,
Non saprei dir quanto mi fece prode.
E il savio Duca: Omai veggio la rete
Che qui vi piglia, e come si scalappia,
Perchè ci trema, e di che congaudete.
Ora chi fosti piaciati ch' io sappia;
E perché tanti secoli giaciuto
Qui se', nelle parole tue mi cappia.
Nel tempo che il buon Tito, con l' aiuto
Del sommo Rege, vendicò le fora

83 Cf. Par. vi. 92.
the most high King, avenged the wounds whence issued the blood sold by Judas, with the name which most lasts and most honours, was I there," answered that spirit "famous enough, but not as yet with faith. So sweet was the spirit of my voice, that Tolosan as I was, Rome drew me to herself, where I merited to adorn my temples with myrtle. Statius the folk still name me there: I sang of Thebes and of the great Achilles; but I fell in the way with the second burthen. To my ardour were seed the sparks which warmed me of the divine flame, whence

Ond' uscì il sangue per Giuda venduto;
Col nome che più dura e più onora,
Er' io di là, rispose quello spirto,
Famoso assai, ma non con fede ancora.
Tanto fu dolce mio vocale spirto,
Che Tolosano a sè mi trasse Roma,
Dove mertai le tempie ornar di mirto.

Stazio la gente ancor di là mi noma:
Cantai di Tebe, e poi del grande Achille:
Ma caddi in via con la seconda soma.
Al mio ardor fur seme le faville
Che mi scaldar della divina fiamma,

85 I.e. the name of poet. The exact date of Statius's birth is uncertain, but it was probably about A.D. 65. As he died in the last year of Domitian, A.D. 96, the other date which Philalethes gives, A.D. 85, is impossible. The belief that he was born at Toulouse arises from a confusion of him with a rhetorician of the same name, for which Lactantius is responsible. From Silvae v. 3. ll. 105, 106 it appears that he was a Neapolitan. But the Silvae had not been found in Dante's time.
88 dolce. In Conv. iii. 25 he is called "Stazio, il dolce poeta."
Cf. Juvenal vii. 84.
93 The Achilleid ends abruptly at l. 452 of the second book.
more than a thousand have been kindled; I speak of the Æneid, which was mother to me, and was to me a nurse in poet’s art; without it I had not stayed a drachm’s weight. And to have lived on earth when Virgil lived, I would agree to a year more than I owe, to my issue from bondage.” These words turned Virgil to me with a face which in its silence said, “Be silent;” but virtue cannot all it would; for laughter and tears follow so much the passion from which each springs, that they least obey will in the most truthful men. I at all events smiled, as the man who makes a sign; wherefore the shade held its peace and

Onde sono allumati più di mille:
Dell’ Eneida dico, la qual mamma
Fummi, e fummi nutrice poetando:
Senz’ essa non fermai peso di dramma.

E per esser vivuto di là quando
Visse Virgilio, assentirei un sole
Più ch’ i’ non deggio al mio uscir di bando.

Volser Virgilio a me queste parole
Con viso che tacendo dicea: Taci:
Ma non può tutto la virtù, che vuole;
Chè riso e pianto son tanto seguaci
Alla passion da che ciascun si spicca,
Che men seguon voler ne’ più veraci.
Io pur sorrisi, come l’ uom ch’ ammicca;
Perché l’ ombra si tacque, e riguardommi

p non fè mai Gg.; fer mai 124.

99 fermai; literally, “made stationary in the scale,” i.e. balanced.
103 Most interpreters take la virtù che vuole (as in Par. vii. 25, and l. 33 of the Canzone “Amor dacchè”) to mean the faculty that wills, i.e. the will. But this seems rather pedantic in a passage of such playful humour.
looked me in the eyes, where the semblance fixes itself most. And, “So mayest thou bring so great labour to a good consummation,” said he, “why did thy face but now show me a flash of laughter?” Now am I caught on one side and the other; the one makes me hold my peace, the other conjures me to say; wherefore I sigh, and am perceived. “Say,” said my Master to me, “and have no fear of speaking; but speak and tell him that which he asks with so great care.” Wherefore I: “It may be that thou marvolest, ancient spirit, at the smile which I gave; but I will that greater admiration seize thee. This who guides on high my eyes is that Virgil from whom thou tookest force to sing of men and gods. If thou didst suppose other

Negli occhi ove il sembiante più si ficca.
E, Se tanto lavoro in bene assommi,
   Disse: perché la faccia tua testeso
Un lampeggiar di riso dimostrommi?
Or son io d' una parte e d' altra preso:
   L' una mi fa tacer, l' altra scongiura
Ch' io dica: ond' io sospiro, e sono inteso.
Di', il mio Maestro, e non aver paura,
   Mi disse, di parlar, ma parla, e digli
Quel ch' e' dimanda con cotanta cura.

Ond' io: Forse che tu ti maravigli,
   Antico spirto, del rider ch' io fei:
Ma più d' ammirazion vo' che ti pigli.
Questi che guida in alto gli occhi miei,
   È quel Virgilio, dal qual tu togliesti
Forza a cantar degli uomini e de' Dei.

ii: il sembiante = “the expression of the face;” cf. Sp. semblante.
So Inf. xxiii. 146.
occasion for my laughter, leave it for untrue; and believe that it was those words which thou spakest of him." Already he was bending to embrace my Teacher's feet; but he said: "Brother, do it not, for thou art a shade, and a shade thou seest." And he, rising: "Now canst thou comprehend the greatness of the love which warms me toward thee, when I forget our emptiness, handling the shadows as it were a solid thing."

Se cagione altra al mio rider credesti,
Lasciala per non vera, ed esser credi
Quelle parole che di lui dicesti.
Già si chinava ad abbracciar li piedi
Al mio Dottor: ma e' gli disse: Frate,
Non far: chè tu se' ombra, ed ombra vedi.
Ed ei surgendo: Or puoi la quantitate
Comprender dell' amor ch' a te mi scalda,
Quando dismento nostra vanitate,
Trattando l' ombre come cosa salda.

\[1 \text{ verc esser e cr. Cass. 1234 W.; asser 5.}\]

132 sqq. Yet Sordello and Virgil had embraced each other (vi. 75). It is curious that Dante should have been guilty of this oversight; still more curious that, as far as I know, no commentator should have observed it.

133 quantitate. Not used elsewhere in D.C. In fact it was at this time a learned word, representing Gr. ποσότης. Philalethes renders "Wievielheit."
CANTO XXII.

ARGUMENT.

They ascend to the sixth circle, while Statius explains how he was turned from his sin, and led to become a Christian by the reading of certain passages of Virgil. Presently they reach a tree of strange form, and afterwards hear voices uttering examples of the virtue of abstinence.

Already the Angel was left behind us—the Angel who had turned us to the sixth circle, having erased from my face one stroke; and those who have their desire to justice he had pronounced to us Blessed, and his voices with

GìÀ era l’ Angel dietro a noi rimaso,
L’ Angel che n’ avea volti al sesto giro,
Avendomi dal viso un colpo raso:
E quei c’ hanno a giustizia lor disiro,
Detto n’ avea, Beati, e le sue voci

\[^{a}\text{avean Cass. 124. W.: in le sue Ald.}\]

5 I have followed Bianchi and Philalethes in reading avea, which is found in Gg., though avean has, as Blanc points out, more authority. He takes quei as the subject, ne as the object of the sentence; “the souls remaining behind called us blessed.” Landino and Vellutello also take this view, and suppose the words to have been those of the Psalm Beati quorum. But this is utterly against all analogy, as is sìtiunt and naught else, furnished forth this. And I lighter than through the other passages was going my way in such wise that without any labour I followed upward the swift spirits; when Virgil began: “Love, set on fire of virtue, always kindles another, so only that its flame appear outwardly. Wherefore, from the hour when Juvenal descended among us in the border of Hell, who made known to me

Con sìtiunt, senz’ altro ciò fornirò.\(^b\)

Ed io più lieve che per l’ altre foci,

M’ andava sì che senza alcun labore

Seguiva in su gli spiriti veloci:\(^c\)

Quando Virgilio cominciò: Amore

Acceso da virtù sempre altro accese,

Pur che la fiamma sua paresse fuore.

Onde, dall’ ora che tra noi discese

Nel limbo dello inferno Giuvenale,

\(^b\) sìtio e senz’ a. W.; sìtio senz’ Gg. Cass. 1234.

\(^c\) Seguivan su Gg.

also the notion involved in the reading sìtio, which they take as a detached ejaculation. It will be observed, that although the beatitudes at the end of each circle are sometimes uttered apparently by several voices, yet, wherever an angel is specially mentioned as stationed at the passage, it is he who pronounces the words; and in the other cases the voices would seem to be angelic. Here perhaps the other voices may be understood to follow in a kind of chorus. Cf. xii. 110. Fornire originally means “to further,” “complete;” so here it may convey the idea of filling up, or confirming. The words here indicated are evidently “Beati qui sìtiunt justitiam,” esirìunt being left for the sixth circle, xxiv. 154. The emphasis is on the justitiam, πλεονέκτεια being, according to Ar. Eth. v. 1, a subdivision of àdulia. Cf. also De. Mon. i. 13, “justitiae maxime contrariatur cupiditas;” and see Perez (“I sette Cerchi”), who quotes Aquinas to show that this is the appropriate beatitude for this point, and also points out the parallel in these and the next three lines to the exit from the first circle, xii. 115–117.

\(^\text{\textit{accese}}}\) has here the force of an aorist. See note xxxii. 34.
thy affection, my goodwill toward thee was as great as ever bound me for an unseen person, so that now these steps will appear to me short. But tell me, and as a friend pardon me if too great security loosens my rein, and henceforth talk with me as a friend; how could avarice find a place within thy breast, amid wisdom so great as that whereof through thy care thou wast full?" These words made Statius move a little towards laughter first; then he answered: "Every word of thine is to me a dear token of love. But oftentimes things appear which give false material for doubting, by reason of the true occasions which are hidden. Thy demand proves to me that thy belief is that I was avaricious

Che la tua affezion mi fe' palese,
Mia benvoglienza inverso te fu quale
Più strinse mai di non vista persona,
Sl ch' or mi parran corte queste scale.
Ma dimmi, e come amico mi perdona,
Se troppa sicurtà m' allarga il freno,
E come amico omai meco ragiona:
Come pòtèo trovar dentro al tuo seno
Luogo avarizia, tra cotanto senno,
Di quanto per tua cura fosti pieno?
Queste parole Stazio muover fenno
Un poco a riso pria; poscia rispose:
Ogni tuo dir d' amor m' è caro cenno.
Veramente più volte appaion cose,
Che danno a dubitar falsa matera,
Per le vere cagion che son nascose.
La tua dimanda tuo creder m' avvera
Esser, ch' io fossi avaro in l' altra vita,

28 Veramente, as in vi. 43.
in the other life, perhaps by reason of that circle where I was. Know then that avarice was put too far away from me, and this disproportion thousands of the moon’s revolutions have punished. And if it were not that I made right my care, when I understood the passage where thou criest, in rage as it were at human nature: ‘Why restrainest thou not, O holy hunger of gold, the desire of mortals?’ I had found myself turning in the woful jousts. Then I

Forse per quella cerchia dov’io era.
Or sappi ch’avarizia fu partita
Troppo da me: e questa dismisura
Migliaia di lunari hanno punita.
E se non fosse ch’io drizzi mia cura,
Quand’io intesi là dove tu chiame,
Crucciato quasi all’umana natura,
Perch’è non reggi tu, o sacra fame
Dell’oro, l’appetito de’ mortali?

[Note: d gli appetiti Gg. Cass.]

36 Six thousand months, says Philalethes, estimating by xxi. 67.
40, 41 These lines, intended as a rendering of Aen. iii. 56, 57, have puzzled the commentators greatly. They are divided, in the first place, between the readings Perché and A che (for Buti’s Per che, “through what ways,” is of no value). The weight of authority is altogether in favour of Perché, and this is the reading of 12345, Aldus, Landino; the latter of whom either does not see, or shrinks the difficulty. The Ottimo reads perché, but explains a che; and in the note to xx. 60, translates the same passage from Virgil, with a che, which is of course the correct rendering of “Quid” here, and therefore all the less likely to have been altered by copyists to perché. We must next observe that the only meaning of “cogis,” which can be rendered by reggi, is “re-strainest;” and from this it is pretty clear that Dante understood “sacra fames” in a good sense, equivalent to the “holy poverty” of theologians. There is, however, something to be said for the interpre-perceived that the hands could spread their wings too much to spend, and thus I repented of this as of other sins. How many will arise with shortened hair, through the ignorance which takes away repentance for this sin while they live, and in their last hour! And know that the fault which meets any sin by direct opposition, together with it in this world dries its green. Wherefore if I have been among that folk who bewail avarice, to purge me, it

Voltando sentirei le giostre grame.
Allor m' accusi che troppo aprir l'ali
Potean le mani a spendere, e pentëmi cosl di quel come degli altri mali.
Quantì risurgeran coi crini scemi
Per l'ignoranza che di questa pecca
Toglie il pentir vivendo, e negli estremi!
E sappi, che la colpa che rimbecca
Per dritta opposizione alcun peccato,
Con esso insieme qui suo verde secca.
Però s' io son tra quella gente stato,
Che piange l' avarizia, per purgarmi,
Per lo contrario suo m' è incontrato.

t spander Gg.

oration of J. della Lana, that a "holy hunger," is that which would keep a man from spending unduly. Reggere usually takes a (Diez iii. 118) ; so that we ought, perhaps, to read all' appetito.

"Volando sentirei. I think a similar construction to Lat. "sensit delapsus;" but sentirei may be taken as governing giostre. The reference is of course to the punishment of the avaricious and prodigal in Hell, as described in Inf. vii.

See Inf. vii. 57. These are the prodigals.

rimbecca. "Proprio rimbeccare è quando ripercotiamo indietro la palla, che ci viene incontro."—Land.
has befallen me by reason of its contrary." "Then, too, when thou sangest the cruel war of the twofold grief of Jocasta," said the Singer of the Bucolic strains, "by that string which Clio there with thee touches, it seems that that faith had not yet made thee faithful, without the which good works suffice not. If thus it is, what sun or what candles so dispelled thy darkness that thou directedst afterward thy sails behind the Fisher?"

And he to him: "Thou at first leddest me toward Parnassus to drink in its caverns, and next didst light me on the road to God. Thou didst as he

Or quando tu cantasti le crude armi
 Della doppia tristizia di Giocasta,
 Disse il cantor de' bucolici carmi,
 Per quel che Clio lì con teco tasta,
 Non par che ti facesse ancor fedele
 La fè, senza la qual ben far non basta.$

Se così è, qual sole o quai candele
 Ti stenebraron sì che tu drizzasti
 Poscia diretro al Pescator le vele?
 Ed egli a lui: Tu prima m' inviasti$
 Verso Parnaso a ber nelle sue grotte,
 E poi appresso Dio m' alluminasti.$$

---

$ La fède senza qual Gg. Cass.
$
$ prima m'incitasti Cass.
$$ E prima Ald.

56 doppia tristizia, i.e. the quarrel between her two sons.
58 The reference is to l. 41 of the first book of the Thebaid, where Clio is invoked. It is odd that this should be regarded as an evidence of paganism, seeing how often Dante does the like. Con teco; cf. Sp. contigo.
63 Il Pescator, St. Peter. So Par. xviii. 136.
66 E poi. The reading which Witte and Bianchi take is evidently right.
who goes by night, who bears a light behind him, and helps not himself, but after him makes the people wise, when thou saidst: 'The world renews itself; Justice returns, and the first age of man; and a new progeny descends from Heaven.' Through thee I was a poet, through thee a Christian; but that thou mayest see that which I outline, I will stretch forth my hand to put the colours. Already was the whole world teeming with the true belief, sown by the messages of the eternal realm; and thy word above-mentioned was in harmony with the new preachers; where-

Facesti come quei che va di notte,
Che porta il lume dietro, e sè non giova,
Ma dopo sè fa le persone dotte;
Quando dicesti: Sécol si rinnova,
Torna giustizia, e primo tempo umano,
E progenie discende dal Ciel nuova.
Per te poeta fui, per te cristiano;
Ma perchè veggi me' ciò ch' io disegno,
A colorar distenderò la mano.
Già era il mondo tutto quanto pregno
Della vera credenza, seminata
Per li messaggi dell' eterno regno;
E la parola tua sopra toccata
Si consonava a' nuovi predicanti:

67 quei che va. The subjunctive would be more usual (as in Inf. xv. 45, etc.), but see Diez iii. 347.
70 Virg. Ecl. iv. 5 sqq.
73 It is impossible now to say what were Dante's reasons for supposing Statius to have been a Christian, as no evidence appears to exist either way. He is quoted more than once in the Convito, but without any reference being made to his conversion.
fore I took the custom to visit them. At last they came to seem to me so holy, that when Domitian persecuted them, their plaints were not without tears from me. And whilst there was a station for me in that world, I aided them, and their upright fashions made me hold all other sects of small price. And before that I brought the Greeks to the rivers of Thebes in my poem had I baptism, but through fear I was a hidden Christian, for a long time making a show of paganism; and this lukewarmth made me circle the fourth ring for more than the fourth century. Thou, then, who didst lift for me the covering which hid from me so much good as I say, while that we still have surplus of our ascent,

Ond' io a visitarli presi usata,
Vennermi poi parendo tanto santi,
Che quando Domizian li perseguette,
Senza mio lagrimar non fur lor pianti:
E mentre che di là per me si stette,
Io gli sovvenni, e lor dritti costumi
Fer dispregiare a me tutte altre sette.
E priac ch' io conducessi i Greci a' fiumi
Di Tebe poetando, ebb' io battesmo:
Ma per paura chiuso cristian fu' mi,
Lungamente mostrando paganesmo:
E questa tiepidezza il quarto cerchio
Cerchiar mi fe' più che il quarto centesmo.
Tu dunque, che levato m' hai il coperchio
Che m' ascondeva quanto bene io dico,
Mentre che del salire avem soverchio,

86 Fer dispregiare a me. Cf. the Fr. faire faire à. See note to viii. 106.
tell me where is our ancient Terence, Cæcilius, Plautus, and Varro, if thou knowest; tell me if they are damned, and in what quarter."

"They, and Persius, and I, and others enough," answered my Leader, "are with that Greek, whom the Muses suckled more than ever another, in the first girdle of the blind prison. Many times talk we of the mount which has our nursing-mothers always with it. Euripides is there with

Dimmi dov’è Terenzio nostro antico,¹
Cecilio, Plauto e Varro, se lo sai:²
Dimmi se son dannati, ed in qual vico.
Costoro e Persio ed io ed altri assai,
Rispose il Duca mio, siam con quel Greco,
Che le Muse lattar più ch’altro mai,
Nel primo cinghio del carcere cieco.
Spesse fiate ragioniam del monte,
Ch’ha le nutrici nostre sempre seco.

¹ _amico Gg. Cass. Ald._
² _Varo Cass. Gg._

97 I read _antico_ with Witte, Blanc, and Bianchi, as the usual _amico_ seems absurd when applied by Statius to Terence.

98 _Varro_. If this, and not _Varo_ be the right reading, it is probably P. Terentius Varro Atacinus (Hor. i. Sat. x. 46) who is meant, as the more famous Varro was not a poet, and it is of these alone that Statius speaks. I am inclined to agree however with Blanc that Dante was thinking of Varus, who is more than once mentioned by Horace in company with Virgil (especially A.P. 54, 55, where Caecilius and Plautus are also named), and by Virgil himself (according to one reading) in Ecl. ix. 35. Blanc thinks we should read _Vario_.

104 _monte_, Parnassus.
105 _nutrici_, the Muses.
us and Antiphon, Simonides, Agathon, and other more Greeks, who once adorned their brows with laurel. There may be seen of thy folk Antigone, Deiphile, and Argia, and Ismene, sad as she lived. There is seen she who showed Langia; there is the daughter of Tiresias, and Thetis, and Deidamia with her sisters."

Euripide v' è nosco ed Antifonte,¹
Simonide, Agatone, e altri piu
Greci, che già di lauro ornar la fronte.
Quivi si veggion delle genti tue
Antigone, Deifile, ed Argia,
Ed Ismene sì trista come fue.
Vedesi quella che mostrò Langia:
Evvi la figlia di Tiresia, e Teti,
E con le suore sue Deidamia.

¹ Anacreonte. Ald. Land. Bi.

106 Antifonte, a tragedian mentioned by Aristotle in the Rhetoric (ii. 2,6,23). MSS. give no sufficient authority for substituting Anacreonte. Blanc's Dictionary appears here to be a better guide than his Erklärungen.

109 tue, i.e. named in the Thebaid and Achilleid.

112 This is Hypsipyle, who showed the spring called Langia to Adrastus and his army (Theb. iv. 716 sqq.).

113 la figlia di Tiresia. There is a difficulty here, because the only daughter of Tiresias, named by Statius, or whom Dante could have heard of, is Manto, who is placed among the soothsayers in the fourth pit of the Malebolge (Inf. xx. 52 sqq.). The commentators solve the problem in various ways. Blanc (Dict.) and Bianchi say it must be one of the other daughters, though in his Erkl. the former points out the impossibility of this; others hold the meaning of ivi to be merely "in Hell," but this will hardly do; while Philalethes boldly assumes that Dante, like Homer, has for once taken a nap; and this is perhaps the most reasonable explanation, unless indeed we may suppose that there is a wrong reading, of which there seems no evidence.
Now both the poets began to hold their peace, intent afresh on looking round, free from the ascent and the walls; and already four handmaids of the day were left behind, and the fifth was at the pole of the car, directing ever upward its blazing point, when my Leader: "I think that it behoves us to turn our right shoulders to the outer edge, circling the mount as we are wont to do." Thus usage was there our guidance, and we took the way with less doubt for the assent of that worthy soul.

They were going in front, and I solitary behind, and I was listening to their talk, which gave me understanding to sing. But soon the pleasant converse was broken by a tree which we found in mid-road, with apples sweet and good to

Tacevansi amendue già li poeti,
Di nuovo attenti a riguardare intorno,
Liberi dal salire e da’ paretì:
E già le quattro ancelle eran del giorno
Rimase addietro, e la quinta era al temo
Drizzando pure in su l’ ardente corno,

Quando il mio Duca: Io credo ch’ allo stremo
Le destre spalle volger ci convegna,
Girando il monte come far solemo.

Così l’ usanza fu lì nostra insegnà:
E prendemmo la via con men sospetto,
Per l’ assentir di quell’ anima degna.

Elli givan dinanzi, ed io soletto
Diretto, ed ascoltava i lor sermoni,
Ch’ a poetar mi davano intelletto.

Ma tosto ruppe le dolci ragioni
Un’ alber che trovammo in mezza strada,

\[120\]

\[130\]

i.e. it was now between ten and eleven A.M. Cf. for the expression xii. 81. The metaphor here seems a little confused.
smell. And as a fir-tree grows less by degrees upward, from branch to branch, so that downward; I think in order that no one may go up. On the side upon which our road was closed, fell from the lofty rock a clear liquor, and spread itself over the leaves. The two poets drew near the tree, and a voice within the leaves cried: "Of this food ye shall have dearth." Then it said: "Mary thought more how the wedding should be honourable and complete, than Con pomi ad odorar soavi e buoni.

E come abete in alto si digrada
Di ramo in ramo, così quello in giuso,
Cred’ io perchè persona su non vada.
Dal lato onde il cammin nostro era chiuso,
Cadea dall’ alta roccia un liquor chiaro,
E si spandeva per le foglie suso.
Li due poeti all’ alber s’ appressaro;
Ed una voce per entro le fronde
Griddò: Di questo cibo avrete caro:
Poi disse: Più pensava Maria, onde
Fosser le nozze orrevoli ed intere,

There is no reason to imagine this tree as growing downwards, in the fashion represented by the picture in the Venice edition of 1578. Blanc’s explanation seems perfectly satisfactory: "Dieser Baum hat nicht, wie die Tanne, unten die stärksten Zweige, sondern seine Zweige sind unten dünn und schwach, und werden nach den Gipfel zu immer stärker."

per le foglie suso. "Nichts weiter heiszt, als über die Blätter verbreitete es sich, gerade wie xxiii. 69."—Blanc. Su per is little more than equivalent to Lat. super, e.g. Inf. viii. 10.

There appears to be an allusion to John iv. 3. Caro, for carestia, is common in early Italian, e.g. Villani vii. 3, and elsewhere. Later, aver caro di seems, like our "want," to have got the meaning "to wish."
of her mouth, which answers now for you. And the Roman women of old time for their drink were content with water, and Daniel held food of low price, and acquired wisdom. The first age was as gold beautiful; it made with hunger acorns savorous, and nectar with thirst every brook. Honey and locusts were the viands which nourished the Baptist in the desert; wherefore he is glorious, and so great as by the Gospel is revealed to you."

Ch’ alla sua bocca, ch’ or per voi risponde:
E le Romane antiche per lor bere
Contente furon d’ acqua: e Daniello
Dispregiò cibo, ed acquisto savere.
Lo secol primo quant’ oro fu bello;\textsuperscript{m}
Fe’ savorose con fame le ghiande,
E nettare con sete ogni ruscello.
Mele e locuste furon le vivande
Che nudriro il Batista nel diserto:
Perch’ egli è glorioso, e tanto grande,
Quanto per l’ Evangelio v’è aperto.\textsuperscript{n}

\textsuperscript{m} che quant’ or’ fu \textit{W.}  \hfill \textsuperscript{n} n’ è aperte \textit{Gg.} \textit{Cass.} 1234.

\textsuperscript{145} Val. Max. ii. i. § 5, “Vini usus olim Romanis feminis ignotus fuit.”
CANTO XXIII.

ARGUMENT.

As they wait by the tree, they are overtaken by souls who are expiating the sin of gluttony. These are lean with hunger; and amongst them Dante sees Forese Donati, with whom he converses, and who foretells evil to the women of Florence for their excessive wantonness.

While I was fixing my eyes through the green leaves in such wise as he is wont to do who wastes his life after the little bird, my more than father began to say to me: "Son, come now, for the time that is assigned to us must be more usefully apportioned." I turned my gaze, and my pace not

Mentre che gli occhi per la fronda verde
Ficcava io così, come far suole
Chi dietro all' uccellin sua vita perde, *
Lo più che Padre mi dicea; Figliuole,
Vieni oramai, chè il tempo che c' è imposto,
Più utilmente compartir si vuole.

* agli uccellini Cass. ; uccellin W.

figliuole. Bianchi says that this form occurs in prose, but gives no example, nor is it mentioned by either Diez or Corticelli. It seems best to take it with Blanc as a vocative.
less quickly after the sages, who were talking so that they made going of no cost to me. And one was heard to weep and chant, Labia mea Domine, in such fashion that it gave birth to delight and grief. "O sweet Father, what is that which I hear?" I began; and he: "Shades which go, perchance loosing the knot of their debt." As do the pilgrims full of thought when overtaking by the way folk unknown, that they turn round to them and stay not; so as they came behind us with more rapid motion, and passed, was gazing at us, silent and devout, a crowd of souls. In the eyes was each dark and hollow, pale in the face, and so wasted that

Io volsi il viso, e il passo non men tosto
Appresso ai savi, che parlavan sì
Che l'andar mi facean di nullo costo:
Ed ecco piangere e cantar s'udìe,

Labia mea Domine, per modo
Tal che dilettò e doglia parturìe.
O dolce Padre, che è quel ch'io odo?
Comincia'io: ed egli: Ombre che vanno
Forse di lor dover solvendo il nodo.
Sì come i peregrin pensosi fanno,
Giugnendo per cammin gente non nota,
Che si volgono ad essa e non ristanno;
Così diretto a noi, più tosto mota,
Venendo e trapassando, ci ammirava

D'anime turba tacita e devota.
Negli occhi era ciascuna oscura e cava,
Pallida nella faccia, e tanto scema

9 The pleasure of hearing them repaid the labour.
11 Labia mea Domine. Ps. li. 15, with allusion to the glutton's abuse of his lips to sin.
the skin took its form from the bones. I do not believe that when his hide alone was left, Erisichthon became so dried by hunger, when he most had fear of it. I began to say within myself, thinking: "Lo the folk who lost Jerusalem when Mary set her teeth in her son!" Their eye-hollows appeared rings without gems: whoso reads omo in the face of men, would surely there have recognised the m. Who would have believed that the scent of an apple would so have ordered, begetting a longing, and that of a stream, if

Che dall' ossa la pelle s' informava.
Non credo che cosi a buccia stremava
Erisiton si fusse fatto secco
Per digiunar, quando piu n' ebbe tema.
Io dicea fra me stesso pensando, Ecco
La gente che perdè Gerusalemme,
Quando Maria nel figlio diè di becco, 30
Parean l' occhiaie anella senza gemme.
Chi nel viso degli uomini lègge omo,
Bene avria quivi conosciuto l' emme.
Chi crederebbe che l' odor d' un pomo
Si governasse, generando brama, b E quel d' un' acqua, non sapendo como? c

b governando generasse 5.  c e quel dunque 145.

56 For the story of Erisichthon, see Ov. Met. viii. 738 sqq.
57 Some take tema as = "cause," "ground;" Lat. theme, but this, as Blanc points out, is unsatisfactory; nor does there seem any difficulty about the usual rendering.
58. Josephus relates that, during the siege of Jerusalem, a woman named Mary was constrained by hunger to eat her own child. Cf. Deuter. xxviii. 57. diè di becco, cf. dar di piglio, di morso, di cozzo, etc., see note to i. 49. Philalethes boldly renders "schnabel."
59 The eyes make the o's, the eye orbits and nose the m.
he knew not how? I was already in act to look what so hungered them, by reason of the occasion, not yet manifest, of their leanness, and of their sorry (scurf); and lo! from the depth of its head a shade turned its eyes on me, and gazed fixedly; then cried aloud: "What grace, I pray, is this?" Never should I have recognised him by the face, but in his voice became clear to me that which the aspect held subdued in itself. This spark rekindled in me all my

Già era in ammirar che sì gli affama,
Per la cagione ancor non manifesta
Di lor magrezza e di lor trista squama:
Ed ecco del profondo della testa
Volse a me gli occhi un' ombra, e guardò fisso,
Poi gridò forte: Qual grazia m'è questa?
Mai non l'avrei riconosciuto al viso:
Ma nella voce sua mi fu palese
Ciò che l'aspetto in sè avea conquiso.
Questa favilla tutta mi raccese

__d__ P aspetto suo av. Gg.

38 Both for sense and construction cf. xxii. 30.
39 squama. The "desquamation" of the skin is a well-known symptom of extreme starvation. See, for example, The Times of July 17, 1877, containing a report of the famine in the Madras Presidency. Dante may have observed it in some of the frequent famines of that time.
42 mi seems here to be a "dativus ethicus." "Was wird mir da für Gnade."—Philalethes. See Diez iii. 59.
45 conquiso. "Conquidere importunare, turbare," says Fanfani;
but, as Blanc points out, there is no need here for any meaning other than that of Fr. conquis. Avere conquiso is not exactly a pluperfect (cf. xviii. 51, xix. 16); rather, conquiso is in apposition with ché, ciò being "his identity."
knowledge towards the altered lip, and I beheld again the face of Forese. "Ah! be not intent upon the dry scab which discoursed my skin," he began to pray, "nor upon what lack of flesh I have; but tell me the truth of thyself, and who are those two souls who there make escort for thee; delay not thou to speak to me." "Thy face, which

Mia conoscenza alla cambiata labbia.
E ravvisai la faccia di Forese.
Deh non contendere all' asciutta scabbia,
Che mi scolora, pregava, la pelle,
Nè a difetto di carne ch'io abbia.
Ma dimmi il ver di te, e chi son quelle e
Due anime che là ti fanno scorta:
Non rimaner che tu non mi favelle.
La faccia tua, ch'io lagrimei già morta, dì chi Gg. Cass. 1234.

48 Forese Donati, brother of Corso and Piccarda (Par. iii. 49) and kinsman of Dante's wife Gemma. (Landino, by the way, absurdly confuses Corso with Francesco d'Accorso, the jurist, who is mentioned Inf. xv. Vellutello goes further, and makes Forese brother of Accorso himself, who died some forty years before Dante was born).

49 Blanc in his Dictionary makes an unnecessary difficulty about contendere, and ends by taking it in "'the Latin sense" of ricasare, comparing Inf. xvi. 29. But the usual rendering is in fact much more in accordance with Latin; cf. Lucr. iv. 802. "Stare ammirativo."—Vellutello.

52 Notice ch' io abbia, not ch' io ho, though just before we have che scolora. But the meaning is not quite the same. It is a difetto, not al difetto; the fact being that the construction is somewhat confused by the exigencies of metre. But the point to which attention is drawn is in the one case the existence of the scabia, in the other the amount of the difetto. Philalethes renders, "achte nicht auf jene Schuppen die meine Haut verfärben, noch drauf, dass ich ... Mangel leide." being dead I once wept for, gives me now no less pain of sorrow,” I answered him, “when I see it so distorted. Wherefore tell me, in God’s name, what strips you so; make me not speak while I am marvelling, for ill can he speak who is full of other wish.” And he to me: “Of the eternal counsel descends virtue into the water and into the plant which is left behind us, whereby I am thus made lean. All this folk who sing weeping, for following their appetite beyond measure, in hunger and in thirst are here making themselves again holy. The odour which issues from the apple, and from the spray which spreads itself over the greenery, kindles in us care of drink and food. And not

Mi dà di pianger mo non minor doglia,
Rispos’ io lui, veggendola sì torta.
Però mi dì, per Dio, che si vi sfoglia;¹
Non mi far dir, mentr’ io mi maraviglio;
Chè mal può dir chi è pien d’ altra voglia.⁶
Ed egli a me: Dell’ eterno consiglio
Cade virtù nell’ acqua e nella pianta
Rimasa addietro, ond’ io sì mi sottiglio.
Tutta esta gente che piangendo canta,
Per seguitar la gola oltre misura,
In fame e in sete qui si rifà santa.
Di bere e di mangiar n’ accende cura
L’ odor ch’ esce del pomo e dello sprazzo
Che si distende su per la verdura.⁷
E non pure una volta, questo spazio

¹ spoglia Gg. Cass. ⁶ discende Gg. Cass.

⁷° Probably meaning only that there were more trees than one; a second is mentioned in the next Canto. It may, however, if the comma after volta be omitted, mean that the circuit had to be made more than once.
once only as we circle this course does our pain renew itself; I say pain and I ought to say solace; for that Will leads us to the tree which led Christ with joy to say, 'Eli,' when he freed us with his blood." And I to him: "Forese, from that day in the which thou didst change world to a better life, five years have not passed up to now. If the power of sinning more was ended in thee before the hour

Girando, si rinfresca nostra pena:
Io dico pena, è dovia dir sollazzo:
Chè quella voglia all' arbore ci mena,
Che menò Cristo lieto a dire Eli,
Quando ne liberò con la sua vena.
Ed io a lui: Forese, da quel dl,
Nel qual mutasti mondo a miglior vita,
Cinqu' anni non son volti insino a qui.
Se prima fu la possa in te finita

h ali albori Cass. agilberi Gg. i mut. modo Gg.

73 voglia. Nearly all the commentators take this in much the same sense as the talento of xxi. 64, and explain "as Christ desired to expiate the sins of men, so we to expiate our sins." But this is surely a false parallel, and it seems better to take voglia to mean "the will of God," with an allusion to "not my will but thine be done." The Ottimo seems to see this also, though the note is somewhat rambling.

77 Not as it is usually rendered "Didst exchange the world for a better life." Dante is very careful about his use of articles; and besides, we should have had per, not a. Mutare mondo is like "mutar parte" in Inf. xxvii. 51, or "mutar lato" xi. 102; Lat. "mutare sedes," "urbem," etc. Cf. Petr. Son. cccii. "Contenta aver cangiato albergo." I am aware that my rendering is somewhat awkward; but "change world" may be defended on the analogy of such expressions as "change front," etc.

79 "If you did not repent until infirmity put an end to your power of sinning more [cf. xi. 90], how is it that you have not had to wait longer at the foot of the mountain?" [cf. iv. 130 sqq.]. The "buon dolor" I take to be merely death.
came on of the kindly sorrow which re-weds us to God, how art thou come thus high? I thought to find thee still yonder below, where time by time repairs itself.” Wherefore he to me: “My Nella, with her bursts of weeping, has brought me thus speedily to drink the sweet wormwood of the torments. With her devout prayers and with sighs she has drawn me from the coast where one waits, and has freed me from the other circles. My widow, whom so much I loved, is the more dear to God, and more beloved, in proportion as in good works she is solitary; for the

Di peccar più, che sorvenisse l’ora
Del buon dolor ch’ a Dio ne rimarita,
Come se’ tu quassù venuto? Ancora k
Io ti credea trovar laggiù di sotto,
Dove tempo per tempo si ristora.1
Ond’ egli a me: Sì tosto m’ ha condotto
A ber lo dolce assenzio de’ martiri
La Nella mia col suo pianger dirotto.
Con suoi prieghi devoti e con sospiri
Tratto m’ ha della costa ove s’ aspetta,
E liberato m’ ha degli altri giri.
Tant’ è a Dio più cara e più diletta
La vedovella mia che molto amai,
Quanto in bene operare è più soletta:

1 tema per tema 124.

82 The reading venuto ancora? involves taking ancora as equivalent to gid, for which there seems no authority; though, as non ancora is the negative of gid, and vice versa, it is possible that the meaning of “hanc horam” may not yet have been definitely restricted to a future signification.
Barbagia of Sardinia is in its women far more chaste than the Barbagia where I left her. O sweet brother, what wouldst thou that I say? A time to come have I already in view, whereat this hour shall not be very ancient, in which it shall be forbidden in pulpit to the unblushing dames of Florence to go showing the bosom with the paps.

Ché la Barbagia di Sardigna assai
Nelle femmine sue è più pudica,
Che la Barbagia dov'io la lasciai.
O dolce frate, che vuoi tu ch'io dica?
Tempo futuro m'è già nel cospetto,
Cui non sarà quest'ora molto antica;
Nel qual sarà in pergamo interdetto
Alle sfacciate donne Fiorentine
L'andar mostrando con le poppe il petto.

94 Barbagia is a district in the south of Sardinia. The inhabitants are said to have been originally called Barbaricini, and to have sprung from a settlement of prisoners (probably from Africa) by the Vandals. At this time they formed a semi-savage tribe, independent of the jurisdiction of the Pisans or any other. The mention of Saracens in l. 103 seems to suggest that they may have been regarded as the remainder of those who at one time occupied the island. See Philalethes's note. According to an authority quoted by Witte, the fashion of baring the bosom seems to have continued among the women of this district almost to the present time.

100 The Ottimo, apparently crediting Dante with real prophetic powers, says that this denunciation from the pulpit occurred in 1351. The reference of Philalethes to Villani ix. 245 is not much more to the point, as the ordinance therein recorded was 'made in 1324. Severe sumptuary laws seem also to have been passed in 1329 (Vill. x. 153); and in vi. 69, the historian compares the ancient simplicity with the luxury of this time, much as Cacciaiguida does in Par. xv. 100 sqq. He does not, however, distinctly mention any ecclesiastical or other censure to which Forese's words might refer.
What women of Barbary, what Saracens were ever, for whom there needed, to make them go covered, either spiritual or other discipline? But if the shameless ones were well informed of that sheaf which the swift heaven is binding for them, already would they have their mouths open to howl. For, if my foresight here deceives me not, they will be sorrowful, ere he clothes with hair his cheeks who now is comforted with lullaby. Ah brother! now hide thee no more from me; thou seest that not only I, but all this folk are gazing at that place where thou screenest the Sun.” Wherefore I to him: “If thou recall to mind what thou wast with me and what I was with thee, still will the present remembrance be grave. From that life he

Quai Barbare fur mai, quai Saracine,
Cui bisognasse, per farle ir coverte,
O spirituali o altre discipline?
Ma se le sverbognate fosser certe
Di quel che il ciel veloce loro ammanna;
Già per urlare avrian le bocche aperte.
Chè se l’antiveder qui non m’inganna,
Prima fien triste che le guance impeli
Colui che mo si consola con nanna.
Deh frate, or fa che più non mi ti celi:
Vedi che non pur io, ma questa gente
Tutta rimira là dove il sol veli.
Perch’io a lui: Se ti riduci a mente,
Qual fosti meco e quale io teco fui,
Ancor fia grave il memorar presente.
Di quella vita mi volse costui,

\[m \text{ di ciò che } Gg.\]

\[m^{2} \text{ With allusion to lines 52, 59.}\] who goes before me turned me the other day, when round the sister of him there showed herself” (and I showed the Sun). “He has brought me through the deep night of those dead indeed, with this true flesh which follows him. Thence his succour has led me up, ascending and circling the mountain which straightens you whom the world made crooked. So long he speaks of bearing me company, till I am there where Beatrice will be; there it behoves that I remain without him. Virgil is this who thus speaks to me”

Che mi va innanzi, l’ altr’ ier, quanto tonda
Vi si mostrò la suora di colui,
E il sol mostrai. Costui per la profonda
Notte menato m’ ha de’ veri morti
Con questa vera carne che il seconda.\(^n\)
Indi m’ han tratto su li suoi conforti,
Salendo e rigirando la montagna\(^o\)
Che drizza voi che il mondo fece torti.
Tanto dice di farmi sua compagnia,
Ch’ io sarò là dove fia Beatrice:\(^p\)
Quivi convien che senza lui rimanga.
Virgilio è questi che così mi dice:

\(^n\) viva carne Gg. \(^o\) riguardando Gg. Cass. \(^p\) dove sarà Gg.

\(^{119}\) l’ altr’ ier = literally “the other yesterday;” not of course in its modern sense of “the day before yesterday” quando tonda, etc.
Cf. Inf. xx. 127. This portion of the poem is remarkable for a curious variation on Dante’s usual descriptive style. He introduces in ll. 121 and 131 of this Canto, and 19 and 89 of the next, short parentheses, almost like stage directions, to describe some gesture of the speaker.
There is another instance in xxvi. 126. It will be observed that it is only in the sixth and seventh circles that the shades have the free use of eyes and limbs. Hitherto one or the other has always been under some constraint.
(and I pointed to him), "and this other is that shade, for whom erewhile your realm which is discharging him from itself, shook every crag."

E addita' lo: e quest' altro è quell' ombra,
Per cui scosse dianzi ogni pendice
Lo vostro regno, che da sè la sgombra.
CANTO XXIV.

ARGUMENT.

Sixth circle continued. Dante has further talk with Forese, who points out Pope Martin IV. and others. Bonagiunta of Lucca prophesies to him concerning his exile; and also speaks of the new art of poetry. They pass on, hearing instances of the ills wrought by the sin of gluttony; and presently reach a very bright angel, who shows them the passage to the next circle.

Speech made not going, nor going speech more slow; but in our converse we were going stoutly, as a ship urged by a good wind. And the shades which seemed things twice dead, through the pits of their eyes kept drawing in wonder at me, being made aware of my living. And I, in con-

Nè il dir l' andar nè l' andar lui più lento
Facea, ma ragionando andavam forte,
Si come nave pinta da buon vento.
E l' ombre, che parean cose rimorte,
Per le fosse degli occhi ammirazione
Traean di me, di mio vivere accorte.
Ed io continuando il mio sermone

2 andavam forte. Cf. xxi. 19.
7 continuando, from the words with which the last Canto ends.
tinuance of my discourse, said: "He goes his way upward perchance slower than he would do, for the sake of another. But tell me, if thou knowest, where is Piccarda; tell me if I see any person to remark among this folk who so gaze on me." "My sister, who, between fair and good, was I know not which the most, triumphs already, joyful of her crown, in the high Olympus." So said he first. And then: "Here it is not forbidden to name each one, since our likeness is so pressed out by reason of our fare. This" (and he showed with his finger) "is Bonagiunta—Bonagiunta of Lucca—and that face beyond him, more seamed than

Dissi: Ella sen va su forse più tarda,
Che non farebbe, per l' altrui cagione.
Ma dimmi, se tu sai, dov' è Piccarda;
Dimmi, s' io veggo da notar persona
Tra questa gente che sì mi riguarda.
La mia sorella che tra bella e buona
Non so qual fosse più, trionfa lieta
Nell' alto Olimpo già di sua corona.
Si disse prima; e poi: Qui non si vieta
Di nominar ciascun, da ch' è si munta
Nostra sembianza via per la dieta.
Questi, e mostrò col dito, è Bonagiunta,
Bonagiunta da Lucca: e quella faccia

8 ella, sc. anima, as elsewhere.
9 altrui: Dante himself.
17 I have followed the general interpretation of munta here, and no doubt mugnere is usually mulgere, as in xiii. 57; but mungere would give a better sense here—"wiped away." There seems, however, no instance of this.
19 Bonagiunta of Lucca is mentioned De Vulg. El. i. 13 among those who wrote in their local dialects. He was of the family of the Orbicciani.
the others, had the Holy Church in its arms. He was of Tours, and through fasting purges the eels of Bolsena, and the strong white wine." Many others he showed me one by one; and with their naming all appeared content, so

Di là da lui, più che l’ altre trapunta,
Ebbe la santa Chiesa in le sue braccia:
Dal Torso fu, e purga per digiuno
L’ anguille di Bolsena e la vernaccia.
Molti altri mi mostrò ad uno ad uno:

22 trapunta. "Trapunto, lavoro fatto col punto d’ ago; ricamo.”
—Dict. Cr. Here it explains by “stenuato,” a sense which it is not easy to obtain from the literal meaning of the word.

23 I.e. was Pope, and therefore husband of the Church (cf. xix. 137). It is Martin IV. who was Pope from January 25, 1284 to March 24, 1284. The date of his death given by Villani (vii. 106) is obviously a clerical error; and the matter has been further confused by the fact that some historians seem to have partly overlooked the change of style, so that his Paps can be made, e.g. by Philalethes, to last a year too long. His name was Simon de Brie. He was canon of St. Martin of Tours, and obtained the tiara by the aid of Charles of Anjou, with whom the previous Pope Nicholas III. had not been on good terms. Though he did his best for the French cause he was unable to prevent the reverses which befell Charles in his later years. His reign opened with the Sicilian Vespers, and before the end of it his patron was dead of grief, leaving his son a prisoner in the hands of his enemies. Villani speaks well of Martin IV., and does not mention his gluttonous propensity, which, however, is testified to by various anecdotes.

24 vernaccia, Sp. garnacha, means a certain choice grape, and the wine made from it; also a drink of wine and honey. In the Decameron, however (Day x. Nov. 2), Ghino di Tacco gives the Abbot of Cluny dry toast and vernaccia in order to restore his health, impaired by too much good living; so that in that case it would seem to be some less choice wine. Here, too, as Pope Martin is said to have drowned his eels in the wine, it may be doubted if he would have used the best wine for that purpose. Philalethes has "Firnewein." that I saw not therefore one surly gesture. Using for very hunger their teeth on emptiness I saw Ubaldino of La Pila, and Boniface, who shepherded many peoples with his staff. I saw Master Marchese, who once had room to drink at Forli with less thirst, and even so was such that he felt himself not sated. But as he does who looks, and then

E del nomar parean tutti contenti,
Sì ch'io però non vidi un atto bruno.
Vidi per fame a vuoto usar li denti
Ubaldin dalla Pila, e Bonifazio
Che pasturò col rocco molte genti.

Vidi Messer Marchese, ch'ebbe spazio
Già di bere a Forlì con men secchezza,
E sì fu tal che non si sentì sazio.

29 Ubaldino (of Pila, a castle in the Mugello, or upper valley of the Sieve) belonged to the powerful Ghibelline family of the Ubaldini. Philalethes finds that he was father of Archbishop Roger of Pisa (Inf. xxxiii.), brother of Cardinal Octavian (Inf. x. 120, if it be he who is there intended), and uncle of Ugolino d'Azzo (xiv. 105). There is more variance of opinion as to the identity of Boniface, who was Archbishop of Ravenna, 1274–1295. The Ottimo says nothing; Landino says, "fu francioso;" Vellutello makes him son to Ubaldino; Philalethes, however, finds them both in error, and believes him to have been of the family of the Fieschi, and nephew of Pope Innocent IV. He was employed by Honorius IV. to settle the quarrel between France and Aragon.

30 rocco. There is a question whether the word means here "rochet," or "pastoral staff." I have preferred the latter, as giving a better sense, following herein Blanc and Bianchi; Philalethes translates "Priesterrock," but is not positive. See also Glossary, s.v. "Rocco."

31 Messer Marchese of Forli, according to Landino and others, belonged to the family of the Rigogliosi, but even this is uncertain. The story goes that "dicendo il canovaio, che per tutto si dicea, che non facea mai altro che bere, rispose ridendo, Perch'è non dicon essi [al. di tu loro], ch'io ho sempre sete?"—Landino.
takes account more of one than another, did I to him of Lucca, who more appeared to wish acquaintance of me. He was muttering; and I think I heard “Gentucca,” there where he felt the stroke of the justice which so plucks

Ma come fa chi guarda, e poi fa prezza
Più d’ un che d’ altro, fe’ io a quel da Lucca,
Che più parea di me voler contezza.
Ei mormorava; e non so che Gentucca
Sentiva io là ov’ ei sentia la piaga
Della giustizia che si gli pilucca.

* s’ appressa Cass. 124; si pressa W.; e non si p. 3.
\b di me aver Cass. W.; veder 14.

36 voler gives so much the best sense that I have adopted it, rather against authority. contezza, cf. xx. 29.

37 Gentucca. This word has puzzled commentators as much as anything in the whole poem. Two explanations have been proposed: (a) Benvenuto and the Ottimo take the word as equivalent to gentuccia, “low or common folk,” and the former understands it as an allusion to injurious expressions used by Dante of Lucca, while the latter, taking “non so che” as part of the speaker’s words, sees in them a prophecy of the rise of the White party and the “popolani”; (b) that Gentucca was the name of a Luccese lady, of whom Dante was said to be enamoured, platonically or otherwise. This is the view of Buti, Landino, etc. Blanc agrees with Benvenuto, because Gentucca is not found elsewhere as a proper name, and, moreover, Dante would not be likely to refer to any irregular passion later than the supposed date of the Vision. But is gentucca for gentuccia supported by any analogy? and is there any reason to suppose that Dante’s relations with the Femmina of l. 43 were other than honourable? On the whole, Philaletes seems justified in calling this view “sehr abenteuerlich,” and in preferring, with Bianchi, the other, and, as I venture to think, at once simpler and more poetical explanation of this difficult passage.

38 là, i.e. between his lips. It is of course impossible to render the double sentiva.

39 pilucca, a similar metaphor to “si vi sfoglia,” xxiii. 58.
them. "O soul," said I, "who seest so desireous to speak with me, do so that I may understand thee, and satisfy thyself and me with thy speech." "A woman is born, and wears not yet the wimple," he began, "who shall make my city please thee, in what fashion soever men may blame it. Thou shalt go thy way with this presage: if in my muttering thou didst receive error, the truth of things shall yet make it clear to thee. But say, if I see here him who drew forth the new rimes beginning, 'Ladies who

O anima, diss’ io, che par si vaga
Di parlar meco, fa si ch’ io t’ intenda;
E te e me col tuo parlare appaga.\(^c\)
Femmina è nata, e non porta ancor benda,
Cominciò ei, che ti farà piacere
La mia città, come ch’ uom la ripenda.\(^d\)
Tu te n’ andrai con questo antivedere:
Se nel mio mormorar prendesti errore,\(^e\)
Dichiareranti ancor le cose vere.
Ma di’ s’ io veggio qui colui che fuore
Trasse le nuove rime, cominciando,

\(^1\) Donne, ch’ avete intelletto d’amore.

\(^c\) del tuo Gg. \(^d\) come l’uom Gg. \(^e\) Se del Gg.

43 Femmina. The Ottimo identifies her with the Alagia of xix. 142 (as an alternative to the symbolical interpretation already mentioned), who is said to have been married to Moroello Malaspina. The benda was the headdress of married women and (as in viii. 74) of widows.

45 This line seems to dispose of Benvenuto’s explanation given above. There is a clear opposition between the pleasure which Lucca will give to Dante, and the hard things said of it, not by him—as if that were right we should expect—but by others.

51 The beginning of the first Canzone in the Vita Nuova.
understanding have of love.’” And I to him: “I am one who mark when Love inspires, and in that fashion which he dictates within, go setting it forth.” “O brother, now I see,” said he, “the knot which held back the Notary, and Guittone, and myself, short of the sweet new style which I

Ed io a lui: Io mi son un che, quando
Amore spira, noto, ed a quel modo,
Ch’ ei detta dentro, vo significando.
O frate, issa vegg’ io, diss’ egli, il nodo,
Che il Notaio e Guittone e me ritenne
Di quà dal dolce stil nuovo ch’i’ odo.

disse, il n. 3 W. el novo chiodo Cass.

53 noto. The Ottimo absurdly takes this with spira, “when Love blows full south,” and thereupon gives a long account of the names of the different winds!

55 issa, Lombard for ora. Cf. Inf. xxvii. 21. Landino says it is a Lucchese idiom, for which he is severely reproved by Vellutello, who defends the purity of his native dialect at the expense of the Florentine.

56 il Notaio. Jacopo, of Lentino in Sicily, one of the early writers of sonnets and canzoni, seems to have flourished about the middle of the 13th century. Gigueneé gives several specimens of his verses, a good many of which are extant. The two last quotations in Vulg. El. i. 12 are from him. Guittone d’Arezzo, one of the brotherhood of Frati Godenti, has the credit of having, if not invented, at least established the sonnet in its regular form. See note to xi. 97.

57 Di quà = Lat. citra. ch’ i’ odo: Cass. reading e l nuovo chiodo, translates novum clavum, and explains: “Alludens vendentibus cartam Bononiae, et quaternos cum lineis habentibus certos clavos in se, secundum . . . formam librorum et voluminum veterum vel novorum.” Another note, however, has “Quasi diceret, si modo deberem meas rimas compillardre, modus quem tenes esset clavus mesae menti ; videlicet nunquam scriberem nisi incitatus a corde.” Benvenuto, confusing ll. 55 and 57, has “ora conosco el novo chiodo l’ ostacolo che ritenne,” etc.
hear. I see well how your pens go along straitly after him who dictates, the which surely did not happen to ours.
And he who sets himself to look beyond this, sees no more from the one to the other style." And as though satisfied, he held his peace.

As the birds that winter along the Nile for a space form in the air a troop, then fly more swiftly and go in file, so all the folk that were there, turning away their faces, hastened their

Io veggio ben come le vostre penne
Diretro al dittator sen vanno strette,
Il che alle nostre certo non avvenne. 60
E qual più a guardar oltre si mette,
Non vede più dall’ uno all’ altro stilo.
E quasi contentato si tacette.
Come gli augei che vernan lungo il Nilo,
Alcuna volta in l’ aer fanno schiera, 1
Poi volan più in fretta e vanno in filo;
Così tutta la gente che li era,

alii gradir

h piu a gradir (alt. fr. guardar) Gg.; piu a riguardar Cass.; a rig. W. ; piu 124 piu a rig. W. ; piu a gradir 3 Ald.

I have ventured to make what seems an obvious correction in this line. The usual reading is Che delle nostre, etc. But avvenire di means "to result from" (as in Inf. iv. 28); while the meaning here can only be "to befall," in which sense there does not appear to be any authority for the use of di with avvenire. Moreover, where the antecedent is a sentence, il che, if not invariable, is far more usual than che.

See note at the end of this Canto.

Cf. xxvi. 43, Inf. v. 47. Dante’s images from birds have been often noticed.
pace; nimble both through leanness and through goodwill. And as the man who is weary of running lets his companions go, and so paces on until the panting of his chest is allayed, thus Forese let pass on the holy flock, and came along behind me, saying: “When will it come to pass that I see thee again?” “I know not,” I answered him, “how long I may live; but never will my return be so speedy that I shall not be with my wish sooner at the shore; because the place where I was put to live from day to day grows thinner of good, and seems ordained to woful ruin.”

Volgendo il viso raffrettò suo passo,
E per magrezza e per voler leggiera.
E come l’ uom che di trotture è lasso,
Lascia andar li compagni, e sì passeggia
Fin che si sfoghi l’ affollar del casso;
Sì lasciò trapassar la santa greggia
Forese, e dietro meco sen veniva
Dicendo: Quando fia ch’ i’ ti riveggiua?
Non so, risposi lui, quant’ io mi viva;
Ma già non fia il tornar mio tanto tosto,
Ch’ io non sia col voler prima alla riva.
Perocchè il luogo, i’ fui a viver posto,
Di giorno in giorno più di ben si spolpa,
E a trista ruina par disposto.

\footnote{72} \textit{per volar} Cass. Gg. (alt.) 124.
\footnote{1} sfoga Cass. 14; finchessi sfoga Gg.

\footnote{72} reading sì passeggia. Bianchi reads sì, as in \textit{mi viva}, l. 76.
\footnote{72} cassso. So Inf. xii. 122 and elsewhere. I have used “chest,” from the similarity of idiom; but it must not be supposed that “capsa” and “cista” are etymologically akin.
“Go now thy way,” said he, “for him who has therefore most blame I see dragged at the tail of a beast toward the valley where there is no forgiveness. The beast at every step goes ever faster, increasing until it strikes him, and leaves the body vilely undone. Those wheels” (and he directed his eyes to the heaven) “have not far to turn for that to become clear to thee which my speech cannot make clearer. Now do thou stay behind, for time is so

Or va, diss’ ei, chè queï che più n’ ha colpa,
Vegg’ io a coda d’ una bestia tratto
In ver la valle ove mai non si scolpa.
La bestia ad ogni passo va più ratto,
Crescendo sempre fin ch’ ella il percuote,
E lascia il corpo vilmente disfatto.
Non hanno molto a volger quelle ruote.
E drizzò gli occhi al ciel, che ti fia chiaro\(^m\)
Ciò che il mio dir più dichiarar non puote. 90
Tu ti rimani omai, che il tempo è caro

\(^m\) ch’ a te fia Gg. Ald. Bi.

82 Or va. So viii. 133. quei. The commentators agree in understanding the reference to be to Corso Donati, though Forese’s prophecy does not strictly agree with the manner of his death as related by Villani (viii. 96) and others, who say that having fled from the city he was captured by some Catalanian mercenaries, and chancing to fall, either by accident or design, from his horse, was killed by them. This happened in 1308. May not the language, however, be metaphorical? Thus the bestia would be the popular party, of which Corso once thought himself the head, while he was really being dragged on by them, and by which he was ultimately destroyed. Cf. belva, xiv. 62. It is curious that Padre d’Aquino omits these three lines from his Latin version, his usual practice only where the Papacy is attacked.
precious in this realm, that I lose too much going thus level with thee."

As issues sometimes at a gallop a horseman from a troop which rides, and goes to do himself honour in the first assault, so departed he from us with greater strides; and I remained in the way with but the two, who were so great commanders of the world. And when he was gone so far in front of us that my eyes went in pursuit of him in like manner as my mind of his words, there appeared to me the laden and living branches of another apple tree, and not

In questo regno si, ch' io perdo troppo
Venendo teco si a paro a paro.
Qual' esce alcuna volta di galoppo
Lo cavalier di schiera che cavalchi,
E va per farsi onor del primo intoppo;
Tal si partì da noi con maggior valchi:
Ed io rimasi in via con esso i due,
Che fur del mondo si gran marescalchi.
E quando innanzi a noi si entrato fue,
Che gli occhi miei si fero a lui seguaci,
Come la mente alle parole sue,
Parvermi i rami gravidi e vivaci
D' un altro pomo, e non molto lontani,

\[\text{n} \text{ con essi due Gg.}\]

94 As happened actually at Campaldino, notes Philalethes.
95 Notice marescalchi, "marshals," already in its modern use of high officers.
101 I.e. his form was no clearer to my eyes than his words to my mind.
very far off, seeing that I had but then turned that way. I saw folk beneath it raise their hands and cry I know not what, towards thè leaves; like children who pray eagerly and in vain, and he who is prayed answers not; but to make their wish be very keen holds their desire on high, and hides it not. Then they departed, as if undeceived; and right so came we to the great tree, which rejects so many prayers and tears. "Pass ye on further without drawing near; a tree there is higher up which was eaten of by Eve, and this plant was raised from it." Thus among the branches some one spake; wherefore Virgil, and Statius, and I, drawing close together, went further on the side

Per esser pure allora volto in laci.
Vidi gente sott' esso alzar le mani,
E gridar non so che verso le fronde,
Quasi bramosi fantolini e vani.\(^6\)
Che pregano, e il pregato non risponde;
Ma per fare esser ben lor voglia acuta,
Tien alto lor disio, e nol nasconde.
Poi si partì si come ricreduta:
E noi venimmo al grande arbore adesso,
Che tanti prieghi e lagrime rifiuta.
Trapassate oltre senza farvi presso:
Legno è più su che fu morso da Eva,
E questa pianta si levò da esso.
Si tra le frasche non so chi diceva:
Per che Virgilio e Stazio ed io ristretti

\(^6\) f. o nani Gg.

\(^{105}\) I.e. because we had only just turned the shoulder of the mountain sufficiently to come in sight of it. The curve would by this time have become sharp.

\(^{110}\) The tree of knowledge, Canto xxxii.
where is the rise. "Bethink ye," it said, "of the accursed ones formed in the clouds, who, when full fed, fought against Theseus with their twofold breasts; and of the Hebrews, who showed themselves at the drinking weak, so that Gideon would not have them for companions when he descended the hills toward Midian." So skirting one of the two edges we passed, hearing faults of gluttony, already followed by unhappy guerdon. Then, spreading out again over the solitary road, full a thousand paces and more we bore ourselves further, each contemplating without a word.

Oltre andavam dal lato che si leva.
Ricordivi, dicea, de’ maladetti
Ne’ nuvoli formati, che satolli
Teseo combatter coi doppi petti:
E degli Ebrei ch’ al ber si mostrar molli,
Che non gli volle Gedeon compagni,\(^p\)
Quando inver Madiàn discese i colli.\(^q\)
Si accostati all’ un de’ duo vivagni,
Passammo udendo colpe della gola
Seguitem di là da miseri guadagni.
Poi rallargati per la strada sola,
Ben mille passi e più ci portammo oltre,\(^r\)
Contemplando ciascun senza parola.

\(^p\) Perche non v’ ebbe Cass. 1234. Ald. ; non gli ebbe Bi. ; no’ i volle W.
\(^q\) distese Gg. 1234.
\(^r\) ci portar Gg. Cass. W.

\(^{120}\) I.e. between the tree and the rock.
\(^{121}\) The Centaurs, born of Ixion and a cloud. The allusion is to their fight “super mero” with the Lapithae and Theseus, at the wedding of Pirithous. Ov. Met. xii. 210 sqq.
\(^{125}\) I have followed the reading of Gc., which seems to give the best sense without spoiling the rhythm.
"Whereof go ye so in thought, ye lone three?" a sudden voice said; whereat I started, as do beasts affrighted and timid. I raised my head to see who it was, and never were seen in furnace glass or metal so shining and ruddy as I saw one who was saying: "If it pleases you to mount upward, here it behoves to turn; this way he goes who would go for his peace." His aspect had taken away my sight; wherefore I turned back to my teachers, like a man who goes according as he hears. And as, a herald of the dawn, the breeze of May stirs and smells sweet, all impregnate with the grass and with the flowers; so felt I a wind touch me amid the Che andate pensando sì voi sol tre?

Subita voce disse: ond'io mi scossi,
Come fan bestie spaventate e poltre.
Drizzai la testa per veder chi fossi:
E giammai non si videro in fornace
Vetri o metalli sì lucenti e rossi,
Com'io vidi un che dicea: S' a voi piace
Montare in su, qui si convien dar volta;\(^5\)
Quinci si va chi vuole andar per pace.
L' aspetto suo m' avea la vista tolta:
Perch'io mi volsi indietro a' miei dottori
Com' uom che va secondo ch'egli ascolta.
E quale, annunziatrice degli albori,
L' aura di Maggio muovesi ed olezza,
Tutta impregnata dall' erba e da' fiori,
Tal mi sentì' un vento dar per mezza

\(^5\) montare in p. Gg.

149 Compare with this the passage from the third circle, xvii. 67, and see note to xxii. 5.
forehead, and well I heard the plumes move that made me perceive the fragrance of ambrosia; and I heard say:

"Blessed are they whom so great grace illumines, that the love of taste makes not too great desire smoke in their breasts; hungering always for whatsoever is righteous."

La fronte: e ben senti' muover la piuma
Che fe' sentir d' ambrosia l' orezza:
E senti' dir: Beati cui alluma
Tanto di grazia, che l' amor del gusto
Nel petto lor troppo disir non fuma,
Esuriendo sempre quanto è giusto.

154. Bianchi notes the contrast between alluma and fuma.
155 I.e. reserving their hunger for righteousness, not for bodily food. Not, I think, "hungering in moderation."

NOTE TO LINES 61, 62.

"Luogo oscurissimo," says Blanc (in his Dictionary, s.v. gradire), and, it may be added, almost certainly corrupt. In fact the whole of this passage, from l. 52 onwards, has, as may be seen from the notes to ll. 53 and 57, puzzled the commentators terribly. Pietro di Dante passes it almost without notice; Benvenuto is only just better than the "alcuni," who, as he tells us, "per dittatore vogliono interpretar Tullio sommo oratore" (!); Landino makes good enough sense, but one hardly to be extracted from the words, and the moderns have mostly followed him. Setting aside slight differences of arrangement, there are two readings of l. 61, both of nearly equal authority and both equally difficult to interpret satisfactorily. These are "qual più a gradir," and "qual più a guardar" or "riguardar." In two of the three MSS. at Cambridge, each of these readings finds one supporter, while the third and best, that which I have called “Gg.,” having originally contained aguardar, now shows an alteration in a hand not much later, to agradir (sic). Codex Cassinensis halts in much the same way, giving riguardar in the line, with the variant gradir written over it. Benvenuto has gridar, but attempts no explanation. Of the early editions, 3, Aldus, and others, have gradir, and are followed by Lombardi, Blanc, Philalethes (giving, however, a different rendering), and Fraticelli; while Bianchi, Scartazzini, and Witte, after 124, and Landino, prefer guarDar or riguardar. Those who take gradire, mostly explain, with Lombardi, “he who goes beyond the leader in the wish to give more pleasure;” but Philalethes, following Tommaseo, understands gradire as = Lat. gradiri. There is, however, no authority for the latter rendering, and not much for the former, gradire being usually “to accept,” not “to give pleasure.” If we read riguardar, Bianchi’s interpretation is as good as any: “Chiunque si pone a riguardare più a dentro, chi approfondisce coll’ intelletto i vostri componimenti.” Either of these, however, has very little connection with what has gone before; but the main difficulty is in the next line. There is, as far as I know, no variety of readings here, nor, from Landino downwards, much difference of interpretation. Benvenuto, Buti, and the Ottimo, give indeed various explanations, which greatly need explaining themselves; but Landino’s “Dante precede tanto, che non si puo veder tutto lo spatio che è tra lui e chi riman dietro,” is intelligible enough, and most commentators since, whatever reading of the preceding line they took, have accepted his view that l. 61 means literally “cannot see the distance between the old style [that of artificial conceits, etc.] and the new [that of simply writing as Love prompts].” But surely this meaning can, in the first place, only be extracted from the words by doing great violence to their obvious sense. “To see from one to the other,” is not the same as “to see the distance between one and the other,” “discernere la differenza che c’è fra,” as Scartazzini puts it. Further, if the meaning were ever so clear in the words, what is the connection of the thought? “Now I see,” says Bonagiunta, “wherein we of the old school failed as compared with you. I see how you write as you feel the inspiration, and in obedience only to it; which was not our case.” Surely it is a very lame conclusion to say: “And he who tries to please more [or to look farther] does not realise the difference between the styles.” Scartazzini’s suggestion of gradire altri, though (if gradire without a is admissible) it is somewhat supported by V.N. § xxv. (“coloro che rimano sopra altra materia), does not, as he fondly thinks, remove the difficulties. What we want is something like the following:

"Che qual pur a suo grado oltre si mette.
Non viene piú dall’ uno all’ altro stilo."

I.e. "For whoso, merely at his own pleasure, sets himself beyond (does not follow) the dittator has no chance of arriving at the new and improved style." This will, I think, be found to complete, pretty satisfactorily, the thought expressed by Bonagiunta; and the departure from either of the received readings is, letter for letter, very small. "Vade" would be preferable to "viene," if there were any instance of such a form, which I doubt. The suggestion of a suo grado is in agreement with the use on the part of the Cassinese commentator (though his note is very confused) of such phrases as "suo motu," "ad libitum;" and even Vellutello's "si mette a volersi avanzare" looks as if there was some traditional interpretation pointing to this or a similar reading.

Of course, without some MS. authority, my reading must remain conjectural, and as such I could not venture to put it outright in the text; but I feel almost certain that it, or something like it, was what Dante wrote.

It should be added that of the best-known English translations, one (Cary) has

He that seeks a grace beyond
Sees not the distance parts one style from other;

and the other (Longfellow):

And he who sets himself to go beyond,
No difference sees from one style to another.
CANTO XXV.

ARGUMENT.

As they proceed, Statius, taking occasion from Dante's question how hunger can be felt where there is no body, expounds the nature of the soul, from its first origin in the embryo, and shows how it forms to itself a spiritual body after the other is dead. They reach the seventh circle, where the sin of lust is purged, and hear the souls singing amid a great fire, and commemorating examples of chastity.

It was an hour from which the ascent brooked not a cripple, for the Sun had left to the Bull and Night to the Scorpion

ORA era onde il salir non volea storpio,
Chè il Sole avea lo cerchio di merigge
Lasciato al Tauro, e la notte allo Scorpio.

1 onde appears to have most authority; though Bianchi and some others read che. Blanc says "von welcher aus" in his Erklärungen, but "e perciò" in his Dict. The last, however, requires an awkward parenthesis between ora and its relative (as on this construction it must be) che, and we should expect l' ora.

2, 3 Aries, in which the Sun was, had passed the meridian, and Taurus was on it, which would make the time about 2 p.m. La Notte as in ii. 4, and Inf. xxiv. 3, means that part of the heavens which is opposite to the Sun. This would be now in Libra, and Libra would be wholly past the meridian, its place being taken by Scorpio (the sign). This would now be culminating on the opposite side of the earth. Cf. xviii. 79.
the meridian circle; wherefore as does the man who stays him not, but goes upon his way, whatever may appear to him, if prick of business goads him, thus entered we through the passage, one before another taking the stair, that through its narrowness uncouples those who mount. And as the young stork that lifts its wing through wish to fly, and attempts not to leave the nest, and lets it drop, such was I with will of asking kindled and quenched, coming at last to the action which he does who makes ready to speak. For all that our going was quick, my sweet

Per che, come fa l' uom che non s' affigge,
   Ma vassi alla via sua, checchè gli appaia,
Se di bisogna stimolo il trafigge;
Così entrammo noi per la callaia,
   Uno anzi all' altro prendendo la scala,
Che per artezza i salitor dispaia.
E quale il cicognine che leva l' ala
Per voglia di volare, e non s' attenta
   D' abbandonar lo nido, e giù la cala;
Tal era io con voglia accesa e spenta
Di dimandar, venendo infino all' atto
Che fa colui ch' a dicer s' argomenta.
Non lasciò per l' andar che fosse ratto,

6 bisogno, "necessity," is the usual reading; but bisogna seems to give a better sense. There is of course no difference originally between the two words; and the idea of a man who has an urgent business on hand seems more in Dante's style.
8 Here, and in xxvi. 1, I have followed a variant given by Witte, as innanzi is seldom a preposition of place.
9 dispaia. Cf. xii. 1.
15 s' argomenta, "equips himself." See note to ii. 31.
16 There is some difference of opinion as to the meaning of non lasciò. Landino takes it as "did not overlook" ("s' accorse"); so
Father missed it not, but said: "Discharge the bow of thy speech, which thou hast drawn even to the iron." Then securely I opened my mouth, and began: "How can one grow lean there where the need of nourishment touches not?" "If thou hadst called to mind how Meleager was consumed in the consuming of a firebrand this would not be," said he, "so harsh to thee; and if thou hadst thought

Lo dolce Padre mio, ma disse: Scocca
L' arco del dir, che infino al ferro hai tratto.
Allor sicuramente aprii la bocca,
E cominciai: Come si può far magro,
Là dove l' uopo di nutrir non tocca?
Se t' ammentassi come Meleagro
Si consumò al consumar d' un stizzo,
Non fora, disse, questo a te sì agro.

Witte, "bemerk' es;" Vellutello, "non lassò di dir," and so Bianchi; Philalethes translates "nicht schwieg," which looks as if he agreed with the last. per—ratto. The subj. fosse shows that che is not a relative, but to be taken with per, Diez iii. 333; perché as in xiv. 55, or xvii. 15.

27 scoccare properly applies rather to the arrow than the bow; but it seems to be used in as many ways as our "discharge." In vi. 130, the arrow "scocca;" here the man "scocca" the bow; in xxxi. 16, the bow "scocca." Ferro = the arrow-head. Others understand it of the catch to which in a crossbow the string is drawn, and which is let go by the trigger.

22 The story of Meleager is told in Ov. Met. viii. 260 sqq. The point of this and the following allusion seems merely to be that we have instances in other cases of physical changes in an object, real or apparent, caused by the changes in another object without physical communication between the two; but the apparent good faith in which the legend of Meleager is quoted, as equally good evidence on a scientific question with a matter of everyday observation, is very curious.

23 consumar. This form, arising from a confusion with consummare, accounts for the French consummer.

how at your moving moves within the mirror your image, that which appears hard would seem to thee easy. But in order that thou mayest set thyself at ease within thy wish, o here is Statius, and I call and pray him that he be now healer of thy wounds.” “If I disclose to him the eternal view,” answered Statius, “where thou art present, let it excuse me that I cannot to thee make denial.”

Then he began: “If thy mind, my son, looks at and

E se pensassi come al vostro guizzo
Guizza dentro allo specchio vostra image,a Ciò che par duro ti parrebbe vizzo.
Ma perché dentro a tuo voler t’ adage,
Ecco qui Stazio: ed io lui chiamo e prego,
Che sia or sanator delle tue piage.

Se la veduta eterna gli dislego,b
Rispose Stazio, là dove tu sie,
Discolpi me non potert’ io far niego.
Poi cominciò: Se le parole mie,c Figlio, la mente tua guarda e riceve,

a Drizza Cass.
b vendetta Ald. Land.; dislegeo Cass.; dispiego Bi. c che poi Cass. 124.

3* Several of the earlier edd. read vendetta—(Land. by a printer’s error omitting gli). Philalethes follows them, and Blanc, in his Erklärungen, though in his Dict. he seems uncertain. On the whole it seems to have less authority than veduta, which Bianchi adopts (reading also dispiego, after the Nidobeatina), though the objection that the punishment of Purgatory is not eternal, does not seem of much weight; for we may understand eterna either as some do alóvos in N. T., viz. as “affecting the eternal part of man,” or else “eternally ordained” (cf. vi. 121). “La divina giustizia” Land. Vell. The reading interna, which has been suggested, makes good sense, but is unsupported.
receives my words, they will be a light to thee for the 'how' which thou sayest. A perfected blood, which is never drunk by the thirsty veins, and remains like food which you remove from table, takes in the heart a virtue informative in regard to all human members, as that does which, to become these, runs its course through the veins. Digested yet again, it descends to that part whereof it is more seemly to be silent than to speak, and thence afterwards it trickles upon another's blood in the natural vessel. There the one and the other meet together, the one by

Lume ti fiено al come che tu die.
Sangue perfetto, che mai non si beve
Dall' assetate vene, e si rimane
Quasi alimento che di mensa leve,
Prende nel cuore a tutte membra umane,
Virtute informativa, come quello
Ch' a farsi quelle per le vene vane.
Ancor digesto scende ov' è più bello
Tacer che dire: e quindi poscia gemente
Sovr' altrui sangue in natural vasello.
Ivi s' accoglie l' uno e l' altro insieme,\n\n\nd in seme Ald. Land.

36 il come. So "il quia," iii. 37. Diez iii. 289.
37 The passage which follows should be compared with Conv. iv.
21. The doctrines set forth as far as l. 60 follow very closely the conclusions of Aristotle in Books i. and ii. of the De Gen. An. I have given at the end of this Canto the passages which Dante has more directly imitated, both from that treatise and from the De Anima. The text is so clear that they are hardly required to elucidate it, and they would probably not be interesting to all readers.
39 leve. For this use of the second person, see Diez iii. 284. The plural is more common.
42 vene vane. Dante is rather fond of these verbal jingles. Cf. xxii.
54, Inf. i. 36, etc. See Fanfani, Vocab. dell' uso Toscano, s. v. Bisticcio.
46 The reading, in seme, is directly opposed to Aristotle's opinion, to βήμων οὐ συμβάλλεται σπέρμα εἶς τὴν γένεσιν.—Gen. An. i. 19, 15.
disposition passive, the other active, through the perfect place whence it is expressed; and with that in union it begins to operate, first by coagulating, and then quickens that which for its material it caused to grow solid. The active virtue having become soul, like that of a plant, differing in this only, that this is on the way, and that has already arrived, works then in such wise that motion and sense appear as in a sea-fungus; and at that point it takes

L’ un disposto a patire e l’ altro a fare,
Per lo perfetto luogo onde si preme:
E giunto lui comincia ad operare,
Coagulando prima, e poi avviva
Ciò che per sua materia fe’ constare.
Anima fatta la virtute attiva,
Qual d’ una pianta, in tanto differente,
Che quest’ è in via, e quella è già a riva,
Tanto ovra poi, che già si muove e sente,
Come fungo marino: ed ivi imprende

* gestare Ald.; sostare Benv. L’ anima fatta per v. a. Gg.*

48 lo perfetto luogo. It seems best to understand this of the heart, but other interpretations are given.
49 lui = altrui sangue. It seems better to regard the construction as a dative absolute, like latrando lui in Inf. xxxii. 105 (Diez iii. 247), than to construe it with Bianchi as “congiunto il sangue virile al femmineo.”
50 Most of the older edd. read gestare; but constare, “to curdle,” is evidently required to render the σωμιστασθαι of Aristotle. Gen. An. ii. 4, 29, etc.
51 “One has reached its full development with the acquirement of life, the other has yet to receive reason.” a riva; hence arrivare.
52 fungo marino; i.e. a zoophyte. Was this suggested by a mis-understanding of οὖν ἂν ἦττον τὰ σπέρματα καὶ τὰ κυμάτα τῶν ζώων ζῆν τῶν φυτῶν?
in hand to make organs for the faculties whereof it is the seed. Now is displayed, my son, now is put forth the virtue which has its being from the heart of the begetter, where nature designs all members. But how from an animal it becomes a speaking being thou seest not yet; this is the point that

Ad organar le posse ond’ è semente.
Or si spiega, figliuolo, or si distende
La virtù ch’ è dal cuor del generante,
Dove natura a tutte membra intende.

Ma come d’ animal divenga fante,
Non vedi tu ancor: quest’ è tal punto
Che più savio di te già fece errante;

πιος σαβίος δι’ τε. This is generally understood to refer to Averroes; but, as M. Renan points out, it was not the intellectus possibilis but the intellectus agens, which he held to be one and indivisible for all men. See also Hallam, Lit. of Eur. Part I. chap. iii. § 86. M. Renan, however, considers (Averroes, Part II. chap. ii.) that Dante was misled by Aquinas, who appears to have misunderstood the philosopher of Cordova, who himself probably misunderstood Aristotle. The passages on which he founds his doctrine of the unity of the active intellect, and as a necessary consequence, its separateness from the soul, a doctrine which, of course, is inconsistent with personal immortality, and as such was fiercely combated by Albert and Aquinas, and subsequently anathematised by the Church, would seem to be De Anima iii. 4, 5. In the latter chapter Aristotle distinctly says that it is the active intellect which is χωριστός καὶ ἀπαθῆς καὶ ἀμυγδὴ τὴν ὄυσιν ὑπέργεια, while the παθητικὸς νοῦς is perishable. Here, as elsewhere (e.g. De An. ii. 4, Gen. An. ii. 1), more explicitly, Aristotle declares against the immortality of the individual. Post. Cass. understands the πιος savio di te to be Aristotle, and looking to line 70 he may be right. See also Philalethes here. The intellectus agens stands to the intellectus possibilis (called also possibilis), in much the same relation as sensation to sense. “Vis ultima in homine est . . . esse apprehensivum per intellectum possibilem, quod . . . nulli ab homine alio competit,” De Mon. i. 4.
has already made a wiser than thou go astray, so that by his teaching he made the potential intellect separate from the soul, because he saw no organ appropriated by it.
Open thy breast to the truth which is coming, and know that so soon as in the embryo the fitting of the brain is perfected, the first Mover turns him to it, with joy over such art of nature, and breathes a new spirit replete with virtue, which draws into its own substance that which it finds active there, and makes of itself one single soul, which lives, and feels, and revolves within itself. And that thou mayst the less wonder at my speech, look at the heat of

Sì che per sua dottrina fe' disgiunto
    Dall' anima il possibile intelletto,
    Perchè da lui non vide organo assunto.
Apri alla verità che viene il petto,
    E sappi, che si tosto come al feto
L' articolar del cerebro è perfetto,
Lo Motor primo a lui si volge lieto
    Sovra tanta arte di natura, e spira
Spirito nuovo di virtù repleto,
Che ciò che trova attivo quivi tira
    In sua sustanzia, e fassi un' alma sola,
Che vive e sente, e sè in sè rigira.
E perchè meno ammiri la parola,
    Guarda il calor del Sol che si fa vino,

70 lieto. Cf. xvi. 89, Par. xxxiii. 64. Lo Motor primo. With Aristotle the ἄρχη τῆς κυνήσεως resides in the male parent; here
Christian doctrine parts company with him.
71 Cf. Genesis ii. 7. Thus every individual has his own soul: and of this the intellect is a faculty, and not something separate from the individual soul.
74 un' alma sola. Cf. iv. 5, 6.
the Sun which becomes wine, joined to the moisture which percolates from the vine-plant. And when Lachesis has no more thread it looses itself from the flesh, and virtually bears away with it both the human and the divine; the other powers all mute—memory, intelligence, and will, in act far keener than before. Without resting, of itself it falls in wondrous wise to one of the shores; here it first knows its road. As soon as place there bounds it, the Giunto all’ umor che dalla vite cola.

E quando Lachesis non ha più lino,\(^h\)
Solvesi dalla carne, ed in virtute
Ne porta seco e l’ umano e il divino:
L’ altre potenze tutte quante mute,\(^i\)
Memoria intelligenzia e voluntade
In atto molto più che prima acute.
Senza restarsi, per sè stessa cade
Mirabilmente all’ una delle rive:
Quivi conosce prima le sue strade.

\(^h\) Quando L. . . . piu del lino Cass. Gg. Land.
\(^i\) quasi m. Gg.

---

\(^{84}\) Bianchi puts a full stop at the end of this line, apparently understanding divengono, or some such word, after memoria, etc., in l. 83. It seems, however, best to understand the clauses of the next three lines as explanatory of this line. umano, the senses and passions = l’altre potenze; divino, the intellect, comprising memoria intelligenzia e voluntade. Aristotle, De An. ii. 2, holds that it is only the noûs and the theωρητικόν δύναμις which *ένδέχεται χωρίζεσθαι, καθάπερ το άιδιον τοῦ φθαρτοῦ.

\(^{86}\) rive, i.e. of Acheron (Inf. iii. 78), or Tiber (ii. 100–105). This is not the doctrine of Aquinas, but of Origen. See Ozanam, Part II. chap. iii.
formative virtue rays around, in such manner and quantity as it lives in the members. And as the air, when it is very rainy, through another's ray which is reflected in it, shows itself adorned with divers colours, thus here the neighbouring air puts itself in that form which the soul that has remained by its virtue seals upon it; and then, like to the flame which goes after the fire wheresoever it shifts, its new form follows the spirit. Because from this it has hereafter its appearance, it is called a shade; and from this it gives

Tosto che luogo lì la circonscrive,
La virtù informativa raggia intorno,
Così e quanto nelle membra vive.

E come l' aere, quand' è ben piorno,
Per l' altrui raggio che in sè si riflette,
Di diversi color si mostra adorno,
Così l' aer vicin quivi si mette

In quella forma, che in lui suggella
Virtualmente l' alma che ristette.

E simigliante poi alla fiammella,
Che segue il fuoco là 'vunque si muta,
Segue allo spirto sua forma novella.

Perocché quindi ha poscia sua paruta,
È chiamata ombra: e quindi organa poi

---

k il luogo Cass. li la certo scr. 1245.
90 come quando l' aere è ben più orno Gg.

1 come quando l' aere è ben piu orno Gg.

m diventa adorno Cass.

95 si suggella Cass. Gg.

o all' alma Cass. 124.

p sp. suo Gg.

---

88 sqq. This is the doctrine of Aquinas, Summa Contra Gentiles iv. 79. (Ueberweg, Hist. of Philosophy, § 101. His account of the philosophy of Aquinas and Averroes may be read with advantage, together with all this passage. See also Ozanam, Dante, Part II. chap. iii.)

92 Ar. Meteor. iii. 4.

96 virtualmente. So in virtute, l. 80.
each sense, even to the sight, its own organ. From this we speak, and from this we laugh; from this we make the tears and the sighs which thou mayest have heard over the mountain. According as the desires and the other affections fix us, the shade takes its shape; and this is the occasion of that whereof thou wonderest.”

And by this time we were come to the last turning, and had wheeled to the right hand, and were intent on other

Ciascun sentire, infino alla veduta.
Quindi parliamo, e quindi ridiam noi:
Quindi facciamo le lagrime e i sospiri,
Che per lo monte aver sentiti puoi.
Secondo che ci affigono i disiri\
E gli altri affetti, l’ ombra si figura:
E questa è la cagion di che tu ammiri.
E già venuto all’ ultima tortura
S’ era per noi, e volto alla man destra,
Ed eravamo attenti ad altra cura.

\footnote{affigono 124, Land.; transfigono Benv.; affigone W.}
\footnote{effetti Cass. 14.}

106 ci affigono seems to be the reading with most authority. It is, however, difficult to accept Blanc’s view that it is intended to represent Lat. afficiunt. If we are to retain it, it seems best to take it in the sense of “tie us down,” the man’s character being fixed at his death, and the shade taking its appearance accordingly. The note in Gg., “cum enim anima sit perfectio corporis remanent in ea et in potentiss ejus passiones inclinantes ad motus corporis,” suggests si affigono. But should we not read ci affingono, “fashion us?”

109 Most understand tortura in its modern sense of “torture,” but, as Scartazzini points out, this meaning is not found in early Italian; nor, it may be added, in Latin, though Dante may have formed it from tortor. But it seems safer to take it as I have done.

110 volto seems here to mean merely “turned at a right angle:” perhaps being used to avoid torto after tortura.
care. Here the bank flashes flame outwards, and the cornice breathes a blast upwards, which bends it back, and keeps it away at a distance therefrom. Wherefore it behoved us to go one by one on the open side, and I feared the fire on this hand, and on that, to fall down. My leader kept saying: “Through this place needs one to keep the rein tight on the eyes, because for a little cause one might go astray.” “Summae Deus clementiae” in the bosom of the great heat then I heard them singing, which made me not less eager to turn. And I saw spirits going through the flame, wherefore I looked at them and at my steps, apportioning

Quivi la ripa fiamma in fuor balestra,
E la cornice spira fiato in suso,
Che la reflette e via da lei sequestra;
Onde ir ne convenla dal lato schiuso
Ad uno ad uno: ed io temeva il fuoco
Quinci, e quindi temea cadere giuso.\(^5\)
Lo Duca mio dicea: Per questo loco
Si vuol tenere agli occhi stretto il freno,
Perocch’ errar potrebbesi per poco.

Summae Deus clementiae, nel seno
Del grande ardore allora udi’ cantando,
Che di volger mi fe’ caler non meno.
E vidi spiriti per la fiamma andando:
Perch’ io guardava loro ed a’ miei passi,

\(^5\) _temeva il cader g. Ald. Bi.; temea Land.; c. di g. Gg._

119 Probably with allusion to Matt. v. 28.
121 The hymn at matins, containing the lines:
   “Lumbos jequeurque morbidum Flammis adure congruis.”
123 _volger_ here = to turn back, stop.
my view from time to time. After the end which is made to that hymn they cried aloud, "Virum non cognosco!" then they began the hymn again in a low voice. Having finished it, they cried again: "Diana stayed in the wood, and drove Helice from it, for she had felt the poison of Venus." Then they returned to their singing; then they cried on dames and husbands who were chaste, as virtuous marriage vow lays on us. And this fashion I think suffices them for all the time that the fire burns them; with such care and with such diet it behoves that the last wound should close itself.

Compartendo la vista a quando a quando.
Appresso il fine ch' a quell' inno fassi,
Gridavano alto Virum non cognosco:
Indi ricominciavan l' inno bassi.
Finitolo anche, gridavano: Al bosco
Si tenne Diana, ed Elice caccionne;¹
Che di Venere avea sentito il tosco.
Indi al cantar tornavano: indi donne
Gridavano e mariti che fur casti,
Come virtute e matrimonio imponne.
E questo modo credo che lor basti
Per tutto il tempo che il fuoco gli abbrucia;
Con tal cura conviene e con tai pasti,²
Che la piaga dassezzo si ricucia.

¹ Corse Ald.
² Cotal Gg. Cass. 1234; convien con. cotai Cass. Gg. W.

128 Virum non cognosco. Luke i. 34.
131 I have followed Bianchi in preferring si tenne, the older reading, to corse, as being more in agreement with Ovid's version of the story; especially "'I procul hinc' dixit," Met. ii. 464.
130 Blanc says dassezzo must be an adverb; but the Italian commentators do not seem to see the necessity. Why should it not be like "uomo da bene" and such constructions? Cf. Petr. Tr. Am. iv. 36.
PASSAGES FROM ARISTOTLE ILLUSTRATING LINES 37-66.

37 (De Post. An. i. 18.)

λέγω δὲ περίττωμα, τὸ τῆς τροφῆς ὑπόλειμμα.  Ibb. id.

φάνερον ὅτι τῆς αἰματικῆς ἄν εἰς περίττωμα ῥοφής τὸ σπέρμα.
Ibb. 19.

41 ὅμων τὸ προσελθὼν πρὸς τὰ μέρη τῷ ὑπολειθέντι.  Ibb. id.

47-49 τὸ γε θῆλυ, ἡ θῆλυ, παθητικὸν τὸ δὲ ἄρρεν, ἡ ἄρρεν, πουτικὸν.
Ibb. 21.—τὸ πουτικὸν καὶ τὸ παθητικὸν, ὅταν θίγωσιν, εὑρὸν τὸ μὲν ποιεῖ, τὸ δὲ πάχει.  ii. 4.

50 ὅταν ἔλθῃ (sc. τὸ σπέρμα) εἷς τὴν ύστεραν, συνιστήσου τε καὶ κινεῖ τὸ περίττωμα τοῦ θήλεως τὴν αὐτὴν κίνησιν, ἥνπερ ἀυτὸ τὴν κινήσει κινούμενον.  Ibb. 3.  (So also ib. 4 and i. 20.)

51 ἀεὶ δὲ παρέχει τὸ μὲν ὑδίμ τὴν ὑλήν· τὸ δὲ ἄρρεν τό δημιουργοὺς.
Ibb. 4.

52 ψυχὴ ἐστὶν ἐνελέξεια ἡ πρώτῃ σώματος φυσικοῦ δυνάμει ζωὴν ἐχοντος.  De An. ii. 1.

53 θρεπτικὸν δὲ λέγομεν τὸ τοιοῦτον μόριον τῆς ψυχῆς οὗ καὶ τὰ φυτὰ μετέχει.  Ibb. 2.—Τὴν θρεπτικὴν ψυχὴν τὰ σπέρματα καὶ τὰ κυμάτα τὰ χωριστὰ δηλον ὅτι δυνάμει μὲν ἐχοντα θετεύων, ἐνεργεῖα δὲ οὐκ ἐχοντα πρὶν ἄ καθά όρη τὰ χωρισόμενα τῶν κυμάτων ἔλεγε τὴν τροφήν, καὶ ποιεῖ τὴν τοιαύτης ψυχῆς ἑργον.  Πρῶτον μὲν γὰρ ἀπαντ᾽ ἔοικε ζῆν τὰ τοιαύτα φυτοῦ βιον.  Gen. An. ii. 3.

56 οἶνον ἐκεινῶν ἐκαστον (sc. τῶν μερῶν) ἐνεργεία τοιούτον τὸ σπέρμα dynámei. i. 19.—eĩ ἡ καρδία πρῶτον ἐν τισι ζῶοις γίγνεται, . . . ἐκ tauτῆς ἄν εἰς ἡ ἄρχη. ii. 1.—ἀρχὴ τῆς φύσεως ἡ καρδία. . . . 4.

61 οὐ γὰρ ἄμα γίνεται ζῶον καὶ ἄνθρωπος.  Ibb. 3.

65 ἐπεὶ δὲ ὡσπερ ἐν ἀπάτῃ τῇ φύσει, ἐστὶ τι τὸ μὲν ὑλὴ ἑκάστῳ genei (tòuto δὲ ὁ πάντα δυναμεὶ ἐκεῖνα) ἔτερον δὲ τὸ αὐτόν καὶ πουτικὸν, tοι ποιείν πάντα, . . . ἀναγκὴ καὶ ἐν τῇ ψυχῇ ὑπάρχει τοῖς τάσις diaforáς. καὶ ἐστὶν ὁ μὲν τοιοῦτος νοῦς τῷ πάντα γίνεσθαι, ὁ δὲ τῷ πάντα ποιεῖν . . . καὶ οὗτος ὁ νοῦς χωριστὸς . . . χωρισθεὶς δὲ ἐστὶ μόνον τοῦθ᾽ ὡσπερ ἐστὶ καὶ τούτῳ μόνον ἄθανατον καὶ αἰώνιον. οὐ μνημον—εὕρομεν δὲ, ὅτι τούτῳ μὲν ἀπαθῆς, ὁ δὲ παθητικὸς νοῦς φθαρτὸς, καὶ ἄνεος τούτου οὔθεν νοεῖ. Ο.MouseAdapter An. iii. 5.—ὁ ἄρα καλούμενος τῆς ψυχῆς νοῦς (λέγω δὲ νοῦν ὃ διανοεῖται καὶ ὑπολαμβάνει ἡ ψυχὴ) οὔθεν ἐστὶν ἐνεργεία τῶν δυτῶν πρὶν νοεῖν. διὸ οὔθε μέμψθαι εὐλογον αὐτὸν τῷ σώματι ποῖος τις γὰρ ἄν γίγνοιτο, ψυχῆς ἡ θερμὸς, ἢ κἂν ἄργαν τι ἐἰη ὡσπερ τῷ αἰσθητικῷ νῦν δ' οὔθεν ἐστίν. Ἡβ. 4.
CANTO XXVI.

ARGUMENT.

They pass along the seventh circle, outside of the fire, and hear other souls recalling instances of lust. Dante talks with the poets Guido Guinicelli and Arnald Daniel, who speaks to him in the Provençal tongue.

While thus we were going along the edge one before another, the good Master kept often saying: "Take heed; let it profit that I instruct thee." The Sun was striking me on the right shoulder, which already with his rays was turning all the west from the hue of the sky to a white

Mentre che si per l' orlo, uno anzi all' altro, a Ce n' andavamo, spesso il buon Maestro
Diceva: Guarda; giovi ch' io ti scaltro.
Feriam il Sole in su l' omero destro,
Che già raggionando tutto l' occidente

a Mentre così Gg.

4 The evening Sun is to their right; they are therefore now going about south by west, having made nearly half the circuit of the mountain, and having, as Philalethes points out, occupied some three hours in the ascent from the sixth to the seventh circle. In the circle itself they only spend about an hour. See note xii. 61.
aspect, and I was making with my shadow the flame appear more ruddy, and to such token only I saw many shades as they went give heed. This was the occasion which gave them a starting-point to speak of me, and they began to say among themselves: "That one seems not a fictitious body." Then certain made towards me as far as they could, always with heed not to issue forth where they would not be burnt. "O thou who goest, not through being slower, but haply of reverence, after the others, answer to me, who burn in thirst and fire; nor only to me is thy answer a need, for all these here have thereof greater thirst than of cold

Mutava in bianco aspetto di cilestro:
Ed io facea con l' ombra più rovente
Parer la fiamma, e pure a tanto indizio
Vidi molt' ombre andando poner mente.

Questa fu la cagion che diede inizio
Loro a parlar di me: e cominciarsi
A dir: Colui non par corpo fittizio.
Poi verso me, quanto potevan farsi,
Certi si feron, sempre con riguardo
Di non uscir dove non fossero arsi.
O tu che vai, non per esser più tardo,
Ma forse riverente, agli altri dopo,
Rispondi a me, che in sete ed in fuoco ardo.
Nè solo a me la tua risposta è uopo:
Chè tutti questi n' hanno maggior sete,

6 The sky in the neighbourhood of the Sun always looks white until close upon sunset. It would be now about five p.m.; so this is still more than an hour distant.
7 A well-known phenomenon, being, of course, the converse of the putting-out effect which the Sun is popularly supposed to exercise on fire.
pur. Cf. v. 9.
12 fittizio would seem to support my suggestion affingono in xxv. 106.
water Indian or Ethiop. Tell us how it is that thou makest of thyself a wall to the Sun, as if thou wert not yet entered within the net of death." So to me spoke one of them, and I should already have declared myself if I had not been intent on another new thing which then appeared; for through the middle of the burning road came folk with their faces opposite to these, who made me wait to gaze. There I see on every side each shade make ready, and kiss one with one, without staying, content with short greeting. Thus within their brown troop one ant touches muzzle with another, perhaps to find out their road and their fortune.

Che d’ acqua fredda Indo o Etiopo.

··
Dinne com’ è che fai di te parete
Al sol, come se tu non fossi ancora
Di morte entrato dentro dalla rete.
Sl mi parlava un d’ essi, ed io mi fora
Già manifesto, s’ io non fossi atteso
Ad altra novita ch’ apparse allora ;
Chè per lo mezzo del cammino acceso,
Venne gente col viso incontro a questa,
La qual mi fece a rimirar sospeso.

Lì veggio d’ ogni parte farsi presta
Ciascun’ ombra, e baciarsi una con una
Senza restar, contente a breve festa.
Così per entro loro schiera bruna
S’ ammusa l’ una con l’ altra formica, Forse ad espiar lor via e lor fortuna.

b Al sol pur come tu Gg.  c intorno a Gg.  d a spiare 3 Ald. Bi.

21 I have followed the usual reading of this line, as there seems no trace of any variant; but it is hard to see how it scans. May we read l’ Indo o l’ Etiopo?
33 festa. So vi. 81.
As soon as they part the friendly greeting, before the first step goes beyond that point, each one toils to cry further, the new folk "Sodom and Gomorrah!" and the other "Pasiphae enters into the cow that the bull may hasten to her lust." Then like cranes which should fly part to the Rhiaean mountains and part toward the sands, these shunning the frost and those the sun, the one folk goes, the other comes on its way, and they return weeping to their first chants, and to the cry which most befits them; and there drew near again to me as before, those same who had prayed me, in their lineaments intent on listening. I, who

Tosto che parton l' accoglienza amica,
Prima che il primo passo li trascorra,
Sopra gridar ciascuna s' affatica:
La nuova gente: Soddoma e Gomorra,
   E l'altra: Nella vacca entra Pasife,
   Perchè il torello a sua lussuria corra.
Poi come gru, ch' alle montagne Rife
   Volassero parte, e parte inver l' arene,
   Queste del giel, quelle del sole schiue;
L' una gente sen va, l' altra sen viene,
   E tornan lagrImando a' primi canti,
   Ed al gridar che più lor si conviene:
   E raccostarsi a me, come davanti,
   Essi medesmi che m' avean pregato,
   Attenti ad ascoltar ne' lor sembianti.

Some commentators object to this image that the cranes fly to the north and to the south at different seasons, and altogether when they do go. It is not, however, "volano" or "volino," but "volassero," showing that the picture is purely imaginary. See Blanc, Erklärungen.

sembianti. So xxi. 111.
twice had seen their desire, began: "O souls secure of having, \whenever it be, a state of peace, my limbs have not remained yonder rathe nor ripe, but are here with me, with their blood and with their joints. Here I ascend in order to be no longer blind; there is a dame above who gains grace for me, wherefore I take my mortal part through your world. But, so may your greatest wish soon become satisfied in such wise that that heaven may harbour you which is full of love and spreads itself most broad; tell me, to the end that I may hereafter mark paper therewith, who are ye, and what is

Io, che due volte avea visto lor grato,
Incominciai: O anime sicure
D' aver, quando che sia, di pace stato,
Non son rimase acerbe nè mature
Le membra mie di là, ma son qui meco,
Col sangue suo e con le sue giunture.
Quinci su vo per non esser più cieco:
Donna è di sopra che n' acquista grazia,
Perchè il mortal pel vostro mondo reco.

Ma, se la vostra maggior voglia sazia
Tosto divenga, sì che il Ciel v' alberghi
Ch' è pien d' amore e più ampio si spazia,
Ditemi, acciocchè ancor carte ne verghi,

59 It seems best to take ne (as in Par. xxiv. 28) like Lat. nos, in the sense of "me," though it may mean only "for it," i.e. my journey. Philalethes: "erwirbt mir die Gnade."

63 For the omission of the article before più, see Diez iii. 8. It is as if he had said "il ciel più ampio che si spazia." Cf. Inf. xv. 102, which is the regular Italian construction.

64 So Petr. Son. cxiv.: "Alma gentil, cui tante carte vergo." Vergo lit. = to mark in lines.
that crowd which goes its way thus behind your backs?" Not otherwise is stupefied and confused, and gazing grows dumb the mountaineer, when rough and savage he enters a city, than each shade did in its appearance; but after they were discharged of their astonishment, the which in lofty hearts is soon at rest: "Happy thou, that from our borders," began again that one which first asked me, "art laying in store of experience for better life! The folk that comes not with us have offended in that for which once Cæsar in his triumph heard them shout, "Queen!" against him.

Chi siete voi, e chi è quella turba,
Che se ne va diretto ai vostri terghi?
Non altrimenti stupido si turba
Lo montanaro, e rimirando ammuta,
Quando rozzo e salvatico s' inurba,
Che ciascun' ombra fece in sua paruta:
Ma poichè furon di stupore scarche,
Lo qual negli alti cuor tosto s' attuta,
Beato te, che delle nostre marche,
Ricominciò collei che pria ne chiese,
Per viver meglio esperienza imbarche!
La gente che non vien con noi offese
Di ciò perchè già Cesar trionfando

Per morir meglio Gg. 12345 W.

70 fece. "Fare si usa in luogo del verbo precedente."—Corticelli. Cf. the well-known passage of Thucydides (ii. 49) πολλοι τούτο ἐθρασσαν (i.e. threw themselves) εἰς φρεάρα. So iv. 131, xv. 133.

73 Beato te. Dize iii. 113.

74 ne again, I think, as in line 59. Philalethes has "uns;" but only Dante has been addressed. See line 16.

75 imbarche; lit. "take on board."
Wherefore they depart crying "Sodom!" reproaching themselves, as thou hast heard, and aid the burning by their shame. Our sin was hermaphrodite; but because we kept not human law, following like brute beasts our appetite, in our disgrace by us is mentioned, when we part, the name of her who made herself a brute in the brute-formed planks. Now thou knowest our acts and whereof we were guilty; if haply thou wishest to know by name who we are, there is not time to say, and I will surely

Regina contra sè chiamar s' intese:
Però si parton Sodoma gridando,
Rimproverando a sè, com' hai udito,
E aiutan l' arsura vergognando.
Nostro peccato fu ermafrodito;
Ma perché non servammo umana legge,
Seguendo come bestie l' appetito,
In obbrobrio di noi per noi si legge,
Quando partiamci, il nome di colei
Che s' imbestiò nell' imbestiate schegge.
Or sai nostri atti, e di che fummo rei;
Se forse a nome vuoi saper chi semo,
Tempo non è da dire, e non saprei.
Farotti ben di me volere scemo:

82 "Nämlich sie entfernte sich nicht von der natürlichen Vereinigung der getrennten Geschlechter, deren Symbol die Fabel vom Hermaphrodit ist."—Philalethes. And this seems the best explanation, and moreover the only one which agrees with line 84; τὰ γὰρ ἥρια παρὰ φύσιν συνονεία οὗ χρήστα. Aquinas, he adds, holds that there is a law for man (umana legge) higher than the law of nature, and that sexual excess, though not contrary to the latter, violates the former. Thus Pasiphae "scheint das Symbol der angemessenen, den Menschen zum Thiere herabwürdigenden Befriedigung des natürlichen Triebs zu sein." S.T. ii. 2. Q. 54, Arts. 11, 12, also bear upon this question.
in respect of myself make thy wish less. I am Guido Guinicelli, and I purge myself already, through duly lamenting sooner than at the last." Such, as in the sorrow of Lycurgus, two sons became at seeing again their mother, such became I, but not to so great a height, when I heard name himself of me and others mine the best father, who ever used sweet and graceful rimes of love; and without hearing or speech I went thoughtful, gazing at him a long space, nor, by reason of the fire, did I draw nearer thither.

Son Guido Guinicelli, e già mi purgo
Per ben dolermi prima ch’ allo stremo.
Quali nella tristizia di Licurgo
Si fer due figli a riveder la madre,
Tal mi fec’ io, ma non a tanto insurgo,
Quando i’ udi’ nomar sè stesso il padre
Mio e degli altri miei miglior, che mai
Rime d’ amore usar dolci e leggiadre:
E senza udire e dir pensoso andai
Lunga fiata rimirando lui,
Nè per lo fuoco in là più m’ appressai.

92 Guido Guinicelli of Bologna. See note to xi. 97.
93 I.e. he had not delayed his repentance until the moment of death.

Cf. iv. 132.
94 When Hypsipyle "showed Langia" (xxii. 112) she was in charge of the young son of Lycurgus, king of Nemea. The child slipped away, and was killed by a serpent. In the midst of the lamentations which followed she was recognised by her sons, who were among the Argive army, and embraced by them.—Stat. Theb. v. 720.

95 non a tanto insurgo: because the fire would prevent him from embracing Guido. Of course it is literally "I rise not so far."
96 miglior is usually taken with miei; but whom would Dante call "his betters"? Such mock humility is quite contrary to his usual style. May we read "maggior," "my elders"?
After I had fed full of gazing I offered myself all ready to his service, with that assurance which makes others believe. And he to me: "Thou leavest such a trace, by that which I hear, in me, and one so clear that Lethe cannot take it away or make it dim. Yet, if thy words but now swere truly, tell me what is the reason why thou showest in thy speech and in thy look that thou holdest me dear." And I to him: "Your sweet sayings, which, so long as modern use shall last, will still make precious their very ink." "O brother," said he, "he whom I distinguish for thee with my

Poichè di riguardar pasciuto fui,
Tutto m'offersi pronto al suo servigio,
Con l' affermar che fa credere altrui.
Ed egli a me: Tu lasci tal vestigio,
Per quel ch' i' odo, in me, e tanto chiaro,
Che Lete nol può torre nè far bigio.
Ma se le tue parole or ver giuraro,
Dimmi che è cagion perchè dimostrì
Nel dire e nel guardar d' avermi caro?
Ed io a lui: Li dolci detti vostri
Che, quanto durerà l' uso moderno,
Faranno cari ancora i loro inchiostri.
O frate, disse, questi ch' io ti scerno

* tor nè farlo b. W.
* lo suon mod. Gg.
\h Frate ... ricerno Gg.; O fr. ... quei ch' io mo ti 3.

\[113\] uso moderno. Cf. "Io stil nuovo," xxiv. 56.
\[115\] Arnald Daniel, according to Nostradamus, was of Tarascon, or Montpelier, and died about 1189. Petrarch (Tri. Am. iv. 41) calls him "gran maestro d'amor;" but modern critics have not formed so high a judgement of him.
finger" (and he pointed to a spirit in front) "was a better craftsman in the mother speech. In verses of love and prose of romance he excelled them all; and lets the fools talk who believe that he of Limoges surpasses him. To rumour more than to the truth they turn their faces, and thus they fix their opinion before that art or reason is heard by them. Thus did many ancients with Guittone, from voice to voice giving him only the prize, until the truth prevailed with

Col dito (e additò un spirto innanzi),
Fu miglior fabbro del parlar materno:
Versi d' amore e prose di romanzi
Soverchiò tutti, e lascia dir gli stolti,
Che quel di Lemosi credon ch' avanzi. 120
A voce più ch' al ver drizzan li' volti,
E così ferman sua opinione,
Prima ch' arte o ragion per lor s' ascolti.
Così fer molti antichi di Guittone,
Di grido in grido pur lui dando pregio,
Fin che l' ha vinto il ver con più persone.1

1 che 'l aiutò, Gg. 3; aiuntò 15; a giunto 4.

120 quel di Limosi. Gerard of Borneuil, who was called "the Master of the Troubadours;" "il miglior Poeta nella lingua Provenzale, che fusse d' avanti o doppo lui." Both he and Arnald are frequently mentioned and quoted in the De Vulg. El. See, for instance, ii. 2, where he is said "poetasse circa rectitudinem," and Arnald "circa amorem."

124 See xxiv. 56 as to Guittone. In Vulg. El. i. 13 D. speaks of "Guidonem aretinum, qui nunquam se ad curiale vulgare direxit;" and in ii. 6: "Desistant ergo ignorantiae sectatores Guidonem aretinum et quosdam alios extollentes, nunquam in vocabulis atque constructione desuetos plebescere." Petrarch mentions him twice; once (Tri. Am. iv. 33) with apparent allusion to this passage.

126 con più persone. It seems better to understand this with Lombardi, as meaning "with the majority of people," than either more persons. Now, if thou hast so ample privilege that it be permitted thee to go to the cloister in which Christ is abbot of the community, make to Him for me a saying of a paternoster, so far as needs for us in this world, where power of sinning is no longer ours.” Then, perhaps to give place to another after him, whom he had at hand, he disappeared through the fire, as through the water the fish going to the bottom. I made a little forward to him who was pointed out, and said that for his name my desire was preparing a place of thanks. He began frankly to say: “So pleases me your courteous request that I have not

Or se tu hai sl ampio privilegio,
Che licio ti sia l’ andare al chiostro,
Nel quale è Cristo abate del collegio,
Fagli per me un dir di un paternostro,
Quanto bisogna a noi di questo mondo,
Ove poter peccar non è più nostro.
Poi forse per dar luogo altrui secondo
Che presso avea, disparve per lo fuoco,
Come per l’ acqua il pesce andando al fondo.
Io mi feci al mostrato innanzi un poco,
E dissi ch’ al suo nome il mio desire
Apparecchiava grazioso loco.
Ei cominciò liberamente a dire:
Tan m’ abelis vostre cortes deman, with Bianchi, Philalethes, and (?) Witte, “by reason of the greater number of better poets who have arisen,” or “him, together with others.” I do not understand lo to refer exactly either to Guittone or to pregio, but rather as in Fr. l’emporter sur.

132 Cf. xi. 22.

140 sqq. These lines are in the Provençal language. The MSS. have, as might be expected, made curious work of the words and the early edd. of the rendering. Raynouard and Diez have both tried their hands power or will to hide myself from you. I am Arnald, who weep and go singing, as thou seest, my past folly, and view with joy the day which I hope for hereafter. Now I pray you by that goodness which is guiding you to the summit of this stair, bethink you in due season of my pain.” Then he hid himself in the fire which refines them.

Qué ieu no–m puec, ni–m veul a vos cobrirc.
Ieu sui Arnaut, que plor, e vau cantan
Coma tu ves la passada folor;
E vei iausen lo iorn, qu’esper denan.
Ara vos prec per aquella valor,
Que vos guida al som de l’ escalina,
Sovenhavus a temps de ma dolor:
Poi s’ ascose nel fuoco che gli affina.

at restoring them, but with different results. In the first three lines the differences are mostly only matters of orthography; but in ll. 143, 144 the divergence is considerable. Raynouard gives “consiros vei,” and “E vei jausen lo joi;” while Diez has “Car, sitot vei” and “Eu vei jausen lo jour;” “for as soon as I see my past folly I view with joy the day.” In the last line, Raynouard, with little authority, reads “a temprar ma dolor.” The chief question, however, is as to the reading of l. 146. Diez adheres to the usual “al som de l’escalina.” But this causes a difficulty of scansion, unless we may also read “Que guida vus;” for “vos condus,” which is sometimes found, is obviously a gloss. Raynouard, followed by Bianchi and Philalethes, prefers “al som sens freich e sens calina,” comparing iii. 31. Blanc, in his Erklärungen, seems to accept the reading of Diez; but in his Dictionary he pronounces for the other, with the exception that he wishes to substitute “dol” for “freich,” on the (rather pedantic) ground that cold plays no part in the torments of Purgatory. However, there is some MS. authority for “dol,” none for “freich.” Probably the earliest attempt at a correct editing of the lines is to be found in the MS. I call “Gg.” This appears to have been in the first half of the fifteenth century owned, or part owned, by one “Cola de Castillione,” who has given in the margin what he supposed to be a correct version, signing it with his name,
"Cola in provinciâ enutritus." It should be premised that in the original MS. there are many erasures, but on the whole the readings are those of Diez. The first word of l. 143 is illegible, but the postilla is "i.e. sicut vides." In l. 146 we find "al soneses (alt. fr. som) dell eses scalina." Cola's emendation (my deciphering of which Mr. Bradshaw has kindly corrected) is as follows:

"Tant mabellis vostre cortes demant
Que jeu non puese ni vuelh a vos cubrir
Jeu suy Raynaut que plor & vac cantant
Coma tu ves la passada follor
Et vey gausent lo jorn que sper deciavant
Aras vos prec per aquella valor
Que vos guida al som de lescalina
Sovenha vos a temps de ma dolor."

Except in the fifth line, where Cola's ear for rhythm appears to have failed him, this is not unsatisfactory. His "coma tu ves" is supported by two of the MSS. consulted by Herr Witte (of which, by the way, three have "condus" in l. 147). With such good authority as this I have ventured to adopt it in my text; otherwise, except for a letter or two, I have followed Diez.
CANTO XXVII.

ARGUMENT.

They see an angel who bids them pass through the fire in order to mount up. Dante hesitates, but is persuaded by Virgil, who speaks of Beatrice. Third sunset. They halt in the passage; and Dante falls asleep, and dreams of Rachel and Leah. Fourth sunrise. They reach the summit of the mountain, and Virgil explains that his power to guide is now at an end.

Just as when he makes his first rays quiver there where his Maker shed His blood, Ebro falling beneath the high Scales, and the waves in Ganges being scorched by the noon, so the Sun was standing; wherefore the day was departing,

Sl come quando i primi raggi vibra
La dove il suo fattore il sangue sparse,
Cadendo Ibero sotto l' alta Libra,
E l' onde in Gange da nona riarse, a
Sl stava il sole; onde il giorno sen giva,

\[ \text{a di nuovo Gg. 3; da nova 1245.} \]

1 sqq. It was sunrise at Jerusalem, midnight in Spain, noon in India, and therefore sunset in Purgatory. (See note to ii. 1.)

4 The process by which nones, the ninth hour, or 3 P.M., became noon or midday, is explained by Dante in Conv. iv. 23.
when the angel of God with joy appeared to us. Outside of the flame was he standing on the bank, and was singing Beati mundo corde, in a far more living voice than ours. Afterwards: "Further goes not any, if first the fire bites not, ye holy souls; enter into it, and to the chant beyond be ye not deaf," said he to us when we were near him; so that I became such, when I heard it, as is he who is put into the grave. Upwards I stretched forth my clasped hands, looking at the fire, and strongly imagining human bodies
ere now seen burnt. The kind escorts turned towards me,

Quando l' Angel di Dio lieto ci apparse.
Fuor della fiamma stava in su la riva,
E cantava: Beati mundo corde,
In voce assai più che la nostra viva:
Poscia: Più non si va, se prìa non morde,
Anime sante, il fuoco: entrate in esso,
Ed al cantar di là non siate sorde,
Ci disse, come noi gli fummo presso;
Perch' io divenni tal, quando lo intesi,
Quale è colui che nella fossa è messo.
In su le man commesse mi protesi,
Guardando il fuoco, e immaginando forte
Umani corpi già veduti accesi.
Volsersi verso me le buone scorte:

22 See l. 55. Blanc remarks that it is the only instance in which they hear and are greeted by an angel from a higher terrace. It is, however, hardly correct to speak of the point where the angel stands as a higher terrace, it is rather a part of the seventh circle, only high enough on the mountain-side to be clear of the flames. Indeed, the use of di là would almost seem to imply that the angel is on the hither side, between the fire and the outside of the ledge; but it may be relative only to those whom he addresses.
and Virgil said to me: "My son, here may be torment, but not death. Bethink thee, bethink thee—and if I guided thee safely on even Gerion, what shall I do now, nearer to God? Believe for certain, that if within the heart of this flame thou stayedst, ay, a thousand years, it could not make thee bald of one hair. And if thou think perchance that I deceive thee, turn thee toward it, and make thyself give credence with thy hands on the skirt of thy garments. Lay down henceforth, lay down all fear: turn thee hitherward, and come on secure." And I yet stand still, and against my conscience. When he saw me stand quite still and

E Virgilio mi disse: Figliuol mio,
Qui puote esser tormento, ma non morte:
Ricordati, ricordati... e, se io
Sovr' esso Gerion ti guidai salvo,
Che farò ora, presso più a Dio?b
Credi per certo, che se dentro all' alvo
Di questa fiamma stessi ben mill' anni,
Non ti potrebbe far d' un capel calvo.
E se tu credi forse ch' io t' inganni,
Fatti ver lei, e fatti far credenza
Con le tue mani al lembo de' tuoi panni.
Pon giù omai, pon giù ogni temenza:
Volgiti in qua, e vieni oltre sicuro.
Ed io pur fermo, e contro a coscienza.
Quando mi vide star pur fermo e duro,
Turbato un poco disse: Or vedi, figlio,

b or, che son più pr. Ald. Land. Bi.

22 Notice ti not elided before e, making the break more forcible.
23 sovr'ess0. See note to iv. 27. The reference is to Inf. xvii.
91 sqq.
unyielding, a little troubled he said: "See now, my son, between Beatrice and thee is this wall." As at the name of Thisbe Pyramus opened his eyelids on point of death, and looked upon her, what time the mulberry became vermilion, so my obstinacy being loosened, I turned to my sage leader, hearing the name which ever wells up in my mind. Wherefore he nodded his head, and said: "How! wish we to stay on this side?" then he smiled, as one does on the child that yields at the apple. Then he placed himself in the fire in front of me, praying Statius that he would come

Tra Beatrice e te è questo muro.
Come al nome di Tisbe aperse il ciglio
Piram in su la morte, e riguardolla,
Allor che il gelso diventò vermiglio;
Così la mia durezza fatta solla,
Mi volsi al savio Duca udendo il nome,
Che nella mente sempre mi rampolla.
Ond'ei crollò la testa, e disse: Come,
Volemci star di qua? indi sorrisi,
Come al fanciul si fa ch'è vinto al pome.
Poi dentro al fuoco innanzi mi si mise,
Pregando Stazio che venisse retro,
Che pria per lunga strada ci divise.
Come fui dentro, in un bogliente vetro

35 Beatrice is rarely, if ever, a word of four syllables; so that something is probably missing in this line.
40, 50 Notice that here, as in the first and third circles, Dante has himself to participate in the punishment (see xii. 1, 2, and xv. 145). The sins which are expiated in these cases are those which we know from the evidence of Villani and Boccaccio, as well as from his own admission (xiii. 136, xxx. 126), to have been the special defects in his character.
behind, who hitherto through a length of road had divided us. When I was within, I would have flung myself into boiling glass to cool me, so was the burning there immeasurable. My sweet Father, to strengthen me, went talking only of Beatrice, saying: “I seem already to see her eyes.” A voice guided us which was singing beyond; and we, intent only on it, came forth there where was the ascent. Veni, benedicti Patris mei, sounded within a light which was there such that it overcame me, and I could not gaze on it. “The Sun is going his way,” it added, “and the even comes; stay not, but study your pace so long as the west grows not dark.”

Gittato mi sarei per rinfrescarmi,
Tant’ era ivi lo incendio senza metro.
Lo dolce Padre mio per confortarmi,
Pur di Beatrice ragionando andava
Dicendo: Gli occhi suoi già veder parmi.
Guidavaci una voce, che cantava
Di là: e noi attenti pure a lei
Venimmo fuor là ove si montava.
Veni, benedicti Patris mei,
Sonò dentro ad un lume che lì era,
Tal che mi vinse, e guardar nol potei.
Lo Sol sen va, soggiunse, e vien la sera:
Non v’ arrestate, ma studiate il passo,
Mentre che l’ occidente non s’ annera.

50, 54 Cf. Par. vii. 17, 18.
58 Veni, benedicti, etc. Matt. xxv. 34. These words begin the Introit appropriate to the Wednesday in Easter week, which day has (for liturgic purposes) now begun.
60, 63 Evidently with allusion to John xii. 35.
The way mounted straight through the rock, towards such a quarter that I took away in front of me the rays of the Sun, which was already low. And of few steps did we make trial, when, through the shadow being spent, both I and my sages perceived that the Sun was set behind us. And before that in all its unmeasured parts the horizon was become of one aspect, and Night had her full distribution,

Dritta salla la via per entro il sasso
Verso tal parte, ch'io toglieva i raggi
Dinanzi a me del Sol ch'era già basso.
E di pochi scaglion levammo i saggi,
Che il Sol corcar, per l'ombra che si spense,
Sentimmo dietro ed io e gli miei saggi.
E pria che in tutte le sue parti immense
Fosse orizzonte fatto d'un aspetto,
E notte avesse tutte sue dispense.

\( ^{c} \text{Che pria Gg.; E prima Cass.} \)
\( ^{d} \text{già tutte disp. Gg.} \)

65 I.e. they are now on the west side of the mountain, having made the half-circuit (cf. l. 133).

66 basso is the older reading; the modern edd. prefer lasso, which Blanc thinks more poetical. But is it not for that very reason out of place in a merely topographical passage? Cf. also xvii. 12.

67 The use of levare is somewhat curious; but compare that of togliere, Inf. xviii. 30. In English we use "to pick up," colloquially, in a very similar way.

71 For the omission of the art. before orizzonte, cf. meridian, iv. 138. The meaning is, of course, "before the glow of sunset had faded."

72 There is some difficulty about the meaning of dispense. Philalethes translates "‘Kammern;’" but the only kind of "chamber" denoted by dispensa is a pantry. Vellutello explains "tutte le sue parti"—(does he not understand sue of orizzonte?). Note in Gg. has: "i.e. dispensaciones; quasi diceret antequam nox esset plena ubique." On the whole Blanc’s explanation seems the best; nor is it necessary, with Bianchi, to supply fatto.

Z 2
each of us made of a stair a bed: for the nature of the mount broke up in us rather the power of ascending than the delight. As the goats ruminating become quiet, who have been swift and wanton on the peaks before that they were fed, silent in the shade while that the Sun is hot, watched by the herdsman, who upon his staff has propped himself, and propped tends them; and as the shepherd, who lodges out of doors, passes the night in quiet beside his flock, watching that wild beast scatter it not; such were we all three then, I as the goat and they as shepherds, bound on Ciascun di noi d’un grado fece letto;

Chè la natura del monte ci affranse
La possa del salire più che il diletteto.
Quali si fanno ruminando manse
Le capre, state rapide e proterve
Sopra le cime, avanti che sien pranse,\nTacite all’ombra mentre che il Sol serve,
Guardate dal pastore, che in su la verga
Poggiato s’è, e lor poggiato serve:
E quale il mandrian, che fuori alberga,
Lungo il peculio suo queto pernotta,
Guardando perché fiera non lo sperga;
Tali eravamo tutti e tre allotta,
Io come capra, ed ei come pastori,

* prima che Ald. Land. Bi.
  alii poggiato
* nol disperga Gg. ; nello sp. Cass.

*1 The reading for the alteration which Bianchi and Witte adopt here, lor di posa serve, seems the less satisfactory. As Blanc points out, the repetition of poggiato is much in Dante’s style.
this side and on that by a high rock. Little could there appear of the outside; but through that little I beheld the stars, clearer and larger than their wont. So ruminating, and so gazing on them, sleep took me; sleep which often before the fact comes to pass knows the news.

In the hour, I think, when from the east first beamed on the mount Cytherea, who with fire of love appears ever burning, I seemed in dreams to see a dame young and fair go through a plain gathering flowers; and singing she was saying: "Let him know, whoso inquires my name, that I am Leah, and I go moving about my fair hands to make Fasciati quinci e quindi d' alta grotta.

Poco potea parer lì del di fuori;
Ma per quel poco vedev' io le stelle,
Di lor solere e più chiare e maggiori.
Si ruminando, e si mirando in quelle,
Mi prese il sonno; il sonno che sovente
Anzi che il fatto sia sa le novelle.

Nell' ora, credo, che dell' oriente
Prima raggiò nel monte Citerea,
Che di fuoco d' amor par sempre ardente;
Giovane e bella in sogno mi parea
Donna vedere andar per una landa,
Cogliendo fiori, e cantando dicea:
Sappia, qualunque il mio nome dimanda,
Ch' io mi son Lia, e vo movendo intorno
Le belle mani a farmi una ghirlanda.

\( ^h \text{ il fato Vell.} \quad ^i \text{ i fiori Gg.} \)

94 As to this and the other dreams, see note to this Canto, Appendix A.
me a garland. To delight me at the glass here I adorn myself; but my sister Rachel never is drawn from her mirror, and sits all day. She is fain to see her fair eyes, as I to adorn myself with my hands; to see satisfies her, me to work."

And already, through the brightness before the light, which arises the more grateful to pilgrims, as on their

Per piacermi allo specchio qui m' adorno;
Ma mia suora Rachel mai non si smaga
Dal suo miraglio, e siede tutto giorno.
Ell' è di suoi begli occhi veder vaga,
Com' io dell' adornarmi con le mani:
Lei lo vedere, e me l' ovrare appaga.\(^k\)
E già per gli splendori antelucani,
Che tanto ai peregrin surgon più grati,
Quanto tornando albergan men lontani;\(^1\)

\(^k\) e me l' ornare Gg. 1245; ornar map. Cass.
\(^1\) più lontani Cass. 13 W.

104 It is hard to find an English word to give the force of smaga. Philalethes is happy in having "weichen." Cf. xix. 20. Vell. has "non si smarrisce."

106 There is a question whether we ought to read de' or di, "fain to see with her eyes," or "fain of seeing her eyes." The former makes a better parallel to adornarmi colle mani, but the objection to it is that such words as vago are rarely (vago itself never in D.C.) followed by a simple infinitive. Diez iii. 216. I have therefore followed Philalethes rather than Bianchi and Witte. The former says "Das beschauliche Leben findet seine Befriedigung im Erkennen der Wahrheit welches gleichsam das Auge der Seele ist." See also Conv. iv. 2 ad fin., which agrees with this reading.

108 Cf. Par. xxxi. 29.

111 The reading taken by Witte, più lontani, seems to spoil the sense. The più has clearly slipped in from the line above. See Scartazzini's note, which seems conclusive against the reading which he adopts.
return they lodge less far away, the shadows were fleeing on all sides, and my sleep with them; wherefore I rose up, seeing the great masters already risen. "That sweet apple, which through so many branches the care of mortals goes seeking, to-day will set at peace thy hunger." Virgil toward me used such words as these, and never were there gifts which were for pleasure equal to these. Desire upon desire so came to me of being above, that at every after pace I felt my wings grow for the flight. When the whole stair was passed, and below us, and we were on the topmost step, Virgil fixed his eyes on me, and said: "The temporal fire and the eternal hast thou seen, my son, and thou art come to a part where of myself I discern no further. I

Le tenebre fuggian da tutti i lati,
E il sonno mio con esse; ond' io leva'mi,
Veggendo i gran Maestri già levati.
Quel dolce pome, che per tanti rami
Cercando va la cura de' mortali,
Oggi porrà in pace le tue fami:
Virgilio inverso me queste cotali
Parole usò; e mai non furo strenne
Che fosser di piacere a queste iguali.
Tanto voler sovrà voler mi venne
Dell' esser su, ch' ad ogni passo poi
Al volo mi sentia crescere le penne.\[^{m}\]
Come la scala tutta sotto noi
Fu corsa, e fummo in su il grado superno,
In me ficcò Virgilio gli occhi suoi,
E disse: Il temporal fuoco e l' eterno
Veduto hai, figlio, e se' venuto in parte

\[^{m}\] Al volo mio Gg.; vuol mio Cass.
have drawn thee hither with wit and with art, henceforth take thine own pleasure for guide; forth art thou of the steep ways, forth of the narrow. See there the Sun, which shines upon thy forehead; see the young grass, the flowers, and the shrubs which here the land of itself alone brings forth.
While the fair eyes with joy are coming, which with their weeping made me come to thee, thou mayest sit, and mayest go among them. Await no more my word or my Ov' io per me più oltre non discerno.

Tratto t' ho qui con ingegno e con arte;
Lo tuo piacere omai prendi per duce;
Fuor se' dell' erte vie, fuor se' dell' arte.
Vedi là il Sol, che in fronte ti riluce:
Vedi l'erbetta, i fiori e gli arbuscelli,
Che qui la terra sol da sè produce.\nMentre che vegnon lieti gli occhi belli,
Che lagrimando a te venir mi fenn,
Seder ti puoi, e puoi andar tra elli.
Non aspettar mio dir più, nè mio cenno:

\n quella Cass. Gg. (alt. fr. qui la) Ald. Land.; questa Bi.

199 Because Virgil represents human knowledge.
130 ingegno ed arte. Cf. ix. 125. "Durch Ausbildung des speculativen und praktischen Intellects bist du hierher gelangt"— Philaletes; who also points the allusion to the contemplative and active life in the seder and andar of l. 138. The same is also expressed by the crown and mitre. Here of course the "wit" is that which discovers, the "art," that which utilises the discovery.
sign; free, right, and sound is thy judgement, and it were a fault not to act according to it; wherefore thee over thyself I crown and mitre.

Libero dritto e sano è tuo arbitrio,°
E fallo fora non fare a suo senno;
Perch' io te sopra te corono e mitrio.

° è tutto arb. Gg.

140 sqq. Cf. Conv. ii. 1. "Nell' uscita dell' anima del peccato, essa si è fatta santa e libera in sua podestate."
CANTO XXVIII.

ARGUMENT.

Dante proceeds, followed by Virgil and Statius, through a forest wherein are birds singing and many flowers. They are stopped by a little stream, on the other side of which is a lady gathering the flowers. She explains that this is the earthly Paradise, made at the first for man; and tells him of the nature of its soil and climate, and of the stream which flows through it.

ALREADY fain to search within and around the divine forest thick and living, which to my eyes was tempering the new day, without waiting more I left the bank, taking the level ground at gentle pace over the soil which on all sides

VAGO già di cercar dentro e dintorno
La divina foresta spessa e viva,
Ch’ agli occhi temperava il nuovo giorno,
Senza più aspettar lasciai la riva,
Prendendo la campagna lento lento
Su per lo suol che d’ ogni parte oliva.

* Contrast this with the “selva selvaggia ed aspra e forte” of Inf. i.
* lasciai; notice the singular number. Dante now goes where he will, and the others follow. Cf. l. 82.
gave sweet odours. A soft breeze, without any change in it, smote me on the forehead, with no heavier stroke than a gentle wind; by reason of which the leaves quickly trembling, were all bending towards the quarter where the holy mount casts its earliest shade; not, however, spread from their natural uprightness so much that the birds through the tree-tops needed to leave setting all their arts in work:
 but with full joy chanting they received the breezes of morning among the leaves, which were keeping a ground-

Un' aura dolce, senza mutamento
Avere in sè, mi feria per la fronte,
Non di più colpo che soave vento;
Per cui le fronde tremolando pronte
Tutte quante piegavano alla parte,
U' la prim' ombra gitta il santo monte;
Non però dal lor esser dritto sparte
Tanto che gli augelletti per le cime
Lasciassero d' operare ogni lor arte;
Ma con piena letizia l' ore prime
Cantando ricevieno intra le foglie,
Che tenevan bordone alle sue rime,

That is, towards the west; the breeze blowing from the east, with the diurnal motion of the universe (l. 103), or, as we should say, against that of the earth.

Witte, in common with most commentators, ancient and modern, takes ore as horas. The difficulty of this is that if it is understood merely as "the morning hour" there is no reason for the plural; while, if we take it with cantando, "singing matins," there is no object to ricevieno. Unless, therefore, we can suppose that this latter word is corr upt (Witte gives a variant risedeano), we must, I think, follow Bianchi in accepting Benvenuto's interpretation, and taking ore = auras. Blanc's objection that, as the breeze was senza mutamento, there could be no "first," seems a little pedantic.

tenevan bordone. So Redi. Bacco in Toscana, 408.
bass to their strains, such as collects itself from branch to branch through the pinewood on the shore of Chiassi when Æolus lets forth Scirocco.

Already my slow steps had carried me so far within the ancient wood that I could no longer see back to where I entered, and lo a stream stayed further going, which towards the left with its little waves was bending the grass that sprang upon its bank. All the waters that are in this world most pure had seemed to have in them some admixture beside that which hides naught; albeit it moves along all

Tal, qual di ramo in ramo si raccoglie,
Per la pineta in sul lito di Chiassi,
Quand' Eolo Scirocco fuor discioglìe.
Già m' avean trasportato i lenti passi
Dentro all' antica selva, tanto ch' io
Non potea rivedere ond' io m' entrassi:
Ed ecco più andar mi tole un rio,
Che inver sinistra con sue picciole onde
Piegava l' erba che in sua ripa uscìo.
Tutte l' acque che son di qua più monde,
Parriere aver in sè mistura alcuna,
Verso di quella che nulla nasconde;
Avvegna che si muova bruna bruna
Sotto l' ombra perpetua, che mai

20 chiassi, i.e. Classis, the old harbour of Ravenna, the site of which is now occupied by the famous pine forest. Bocc. Day v. nov. 8.

25 Dante is going towards the east. The stream at this point is therefore flowing from south to north, having turned at right angles to its original course, which, as will appear from xxi. 12, was from east to west. It is the stream Lethe.
brown beneath the perpetual shade, which lets not sun nor moon shine ever there. With my feet I stood still, and with my eyes I passed beyond the little stream to gaze at the great variety of fresh May flowers, and there appeared to me, just as appears suddenly a thing which turns aside through wonder every other thought, a solitary dame, who was Raggiar non lascia sole ivi, nè luna.

Co’ pië ristetti, e con gli occhi passai a
Di là dal fiumicel per ammirare
La gran variazion de’ freschi mai:
E là m’ apparve, si com’ egli appare
Subitamente cosa che disvia
Per maraviglia tutt’ altro pensare,
Una donna soletta, che si gia

[40]

36 mai. “Così chiama il Toscano i verdi rami, che per antica consuetudine nel primo giorno di Maggio appicchiamo alle finestre.” Land.

37 egli. For this redundant use of the pronoun, see Diez iii. 279. So in French, e.g. “il me vient une pensée.”

40 The name of this lady, as will appear from xxxiii. 119, is Matilda. There is much controversy as to the person meant, but the oldest commentators are nearly unanimous in identifying her with “the great Countess” Matilda of Tuscany, the ally of Gregory VII. and benefactor of the Papal see. For a short account of her, Sir J. Stephen’s Essay on Hildebrand may be referred to with advantage. See also Villani iv. 21. Bianchi, in objecting that Dante would not have put so ardent a partisan of the Papacy and opponent of the empire in this important post, seems to have overlooked the very similar function assigned to Cato, who was no less remarkable as an antagonist of the Cæsar of his day. Dante probably was not aware how appropriately-named a personage he had chosen to symbolise the active life. Matilda, Mechtilde = battle-might.
going along singing, and selecting flower from flower wherewith was painted all her way. "Ah, fair dame, who at love's rays dost warm thyself, if I may believe thy countenance, which is wont to be a witness of the heart, may will come to thee to draw forward," said I to her, "toward this stream, so far that I may understand that which thou singest. Thou makest me remember where and what was Proserpine, in the time when her her mother lost, and she the spring." As turns herself, with feet close to the ground and to each other, a dame who dances, and scarce puts foot before foot, she turned, over the vermilion and the yellow flowers

Cantando ed iscegliendo fior da fiore,
Ond' era pinta tutta la sua via.
Deh, bella Donna, ch' a raggi d' amore
Ti scaldi, s' io vo' credere a' sembianti,
Che soglion esser testimon del cuore,
Vegnati voglia di trarreti avanti,\footnote{di trarreti davanti Gg. 2; di traierti av. Cass.; in voglia W.}
Diss' io a lei, verso questa riviera,
Tanto ch' io possa intender che tu canti.
Tu mi fai rimembrar dove e qual era
Proserpina nel tempo che perdette
La madre lei, ed ella primavera.
Come si volge con le piante strette
A terra ed intra sè donna che balli,
E piede innanzi piede a pena mette,
Volsesi in su' vermigli ed in su' gialli

\textsuperscript{50, 51} See Ovid Met. v. 385 sqq. By primavera some understand the spring flowers which Proserpine let fall; but it is probably only a reminiscence of Ovid's "perpetuum ver est."
toward me, not otherwise than a virgin who casts down her honest eyes; and made my prayers to be content, drawing herself so near that the sweet sound came to me with its meaning. As soon as she was there where the grass is just bathed by the waves of the fair stream, she did me the grace of raising her eyes. I do not think that such light beamed under the eyelids of Venus pierced by her son, out of all his custom. She was smiling from the other bank, upright and arranging many hues with her hands, which the

Fioretti verso me, non altrimenti
Che vergine che gli occhi onesti avvalli;
E fece i prieghi miei esser contenti,
Si appressando sè che il dolce suono
Veniva a me co’ suoi intendimenti.

Tosto che fu là dove l’ erbe sono
Bagnate già dall’ onde del bel fiume,
Di levar gli occhi suoi mi fece dono.
Non credo che splendesse tanto lume
Sotto le ciglia a Venere trafitta
Dal figlio, fuor di tutto suo costume.
Ella ridea dall’ altra riva dritta,
Trattando più color con le sue mani;

*c Traendo Gg. Cass. 134 Ald. W.

66 I.e. unintentionally. Ovid Met. x. 525, 526, "Namque pharetratus dum dat puer oscula matri, Inscius exstanti destrinxit arundine pectus."

67 dritta is generally taken to mean merely "the right bank." But surely this is an unnecessary pleonasm; and, besides, dritta in this sense only occurs once elsewhere (xiv. 8). I have followed Blanc in understanding it of Matilda's attitude. See also the woodcut in the Venice ed. of 1578. As a necessary consequence we must, with Landino, read trattando in the following line, instead of the more usual traendo.
high earth sends forth without seed. Three paces the stream kept us apart, but Hellespont, there where Xerxes passed, a bridle still to all pride of men, endured not from Leander greater hate, for surging between Sestos and Abydos, than that from me, for that then it opened not. "Ye are new come, and perhaps wherefore I smile," she began, "in this place, set apart to the human kind for its nest, some doubt holds you marvelling; but the psalm Delectasti renders a light which may uncloud your understanding.

Che l' alta terra senza seme gitta.\(^d\)
Tre passi ci facea il fiume lontani:
Ma Ellesponto, là 've passò Serse,
Ancora freno a tutti orgogli umani,
Più odio da Leandro non sofferse,
Per mareggiare intra Sesto ed Abido,
Che quel da me, perchè allor non s' aperse.
Voi siete nuovi, e forse perch' io rido,
Cominciò ella, in questo luogo eletto
All' umana natura per suo nido,
Maravigliando tienvi alcun sospetto:
Ma luce rende il salmo Delectasti,
Che puote disnebbiar vostro intelletto.

\(^d\) altra 134.

69 If we read altra, the meaning will be "more than the other (i.e. this) earth bears without sowing."

70 "È questo fiume tre passi largo, perche tre cose bisogna a entrar in queste virtù, prima conoscere il vitio, seconda conosciutolo odiarlo, terza odiatolo dimenticarlo," says Landino, a good specimen of the elaborate interpretation of the early commentators.

80 Psalm xcii. 4 (Vulg. xci. 5), "Delectasti me, Domine, in factura tua." See note to last canto.
And thou that art in front, and prayedst me, say if thou wouldst hear aught else, for I come ready for thy every question, so far as may suffice." "The water," said I, "and the sound of the forest, strive in me with a new belief of a matter which I heard contrary to this." Wherefore she: "I will tell how by its cause proceeds that which makes thee wonder; and I will purge away the cloud which smites thee. The highest good, which does only its own pleasure, made the man good and for good, and gave him this place for an earnest to him of eternal peace. Through his own

E tu che se' dinanzi, e mi pregasti,
   Di' s' altro vuoi udir: ch' io venni presta
   Ad ogni tua question, tanto che basti.
L' acqua, diss'io, e il suon della foresta
   Impugnan dentro a me novella fede
   Di cosa, ch' io udi' contraria a questa.
   Ond' ella: io dicero come procede
   Per sua cagion, ciò ch' ammirar ti face,
   E purgherò la nebbia che ti fiede.* 90
Lo sommo Ben, che solo esso a sè piace,\f
   Fece l' uom buono e a bene, e questo loco\g
   Diede per arra a lui d' eterna pace.
   Per sua diffalga qui dimorò poco;

* lede Gg.
\f bene che solo esso se Cass.; esse 4; solo a se 23 Bi.
\g Fe l'uom buon e ben di q. Cass.; e bene a 1345; Fece... buono a bene e 2 Ald. Land.; buono e l ben di q. Bi.

** Dante is now going in front.
*** Statius has told him (xxi. 46 sqq.) that the mountain above the gate of Purgatory is free from all atmospheric changes. Dante is therefore at a loss to understand whence comes the wind which sounds in the leaves, and how where rain never falls there can be a stream of water.
default he abode here little time; through his own default
he changed to weeping and toil honest laughter and sweet mirth. In order that the tumult to which below the exhalations of the water and of the earth of themselves give rise, which so far as they can, go after the heat, should not cause to the man any trouble, this mount rose thus far toward the heaven, and is free from them, from that point where is the barrier. Now, since in a circuit the whole air turns with the prime turning, if its circle is not broken by

Per sua diffalata in pianto ed in affanno
Cambiò onesto riso e dolce giuoco.
Perchè il turbar, che sotto da sè fanno
L’ esalazion dell’ acqua e della terra,
Che quanto posson dietro al calor vanno,
All uomo non facesse alcuna guerra,
Questo monte sallo ver lo Ciel tanto,
E libero n’ è d’ indi, ove si serra.
Or perchè in circuito tutto quanto
L’aer si volge con la prima volta,
Se non gli è rotto il cerchio d’ alcun canto,

97 Bianchi takes sotto da sè = below the mountain. But (though we find di sotto da) there seems to be no example of sotto da, and sè for lui is at the best very harsh. On the whole da sè seems to make the best sense with fanno.

98, 99 Cf. Aristotle Meteor. ii. 4: ὑπὸ τῆς τὰς στοιχεῖ συγκεκριμένη to τοῦ ἐν αὐτῷ θερμοῖ καὶ ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀνωθεν, ἀναβηματαί.
100 Cf. xxi. 49.
103 Cf. lines 11, 12.
105 Witte, Bianchi, Blanc, Philalethes, all take d’ alcuni canto as = merely “in any part.” I have ventured to give it a more special meaning. The upper air revolves steadily from east to west with the movement of the universe; but, being met by a projection, like this any corner, on this height, which is all unbounded in the living air, such motion strikes and makes the wood sound, for that it is close-set; and the plant when struck has such power that with its virtue it impregnates the breeze, and that again in its revolution around shakes it off; and the rest of the earth, according as it is fit by itself or by its sky, conceives and brings to birth of divers virtues divers trees. It would not then on earth appear a marvel, when this is heard, whenever any plant, without seed appearing, takes hold in it. And thou must know that the holy country where thou art is full of every seed, and has fruit in itself which yonder is not plucked. The water that thou seest rises not from

In questa altezza, che tutta è discolta
Nell’ aer vivo, tal moto percuote,
E fa sonar la selva perch’ è folta:
E la percossa pianta tanto puote,
Che della sua virtute l’ aura impregna,
E quella poi girando intorno scuote:
E l’ altra terra, secondo ch’ è degna
Per sè o per suo ciel, concepe e figlia
Di diverse virtù diverse legna.
Non parrebbe di là poi maraviglia,
Udito questo, quando alcuna pianta
Senza seme palese vi s’ appiglia.
E saper dei che la campagna santa,
Ove tu se’, d’ ogni semenza è piena,
E frutto ha in sè che di là non si schianta.

mountain, it is felt as a breeze. By this the seeds (in which the virtù resides) are shaken from the trees and plants, and let fall on the earth below, where they spring up to all appearance spontaneously.

119 An allusion probably to Genesis ii. 9.
a vein which the vapour that cold converts may restore, as a river which gains or loses force, but issues from a fountain steady and sure, which by the will of God receives back so much as opening on two sides it pours forth. On this side it descends with a virtue which takes away from a man memory of sin; on the other it restores that of every good deed. On this hand Lethe, so on the other Eunoe is it called, and it works not, if it is not first tasted on this hand and on that. Of all other savours this is sovereign. And albeit that thy thirst may be sated enough, for all that more I reveal

L' acqua che vedi non surge di vena\(^h\)
   Che ristori vapor che giel converta,
   Come fume ch' acquista o perde lena;
Ma esce di fontana salda e certa,
   Che tanto del voler di Dio riprende,\(^k\)
   Quant' ella versa da due parti aperta.
Da questa parte con virtù discende,
   Che toglie altrui memoria del peccato;
Dall' altra, d' ogni ben fatto la rende.
Quinci Letè, così dall' altro lato
   Eunoè si chiama: e non adopra,
Se quinci e quindi pria non è gustato.
A tutt' altri sapori esto è di sopra:
   E avvegna ch' assai possa esser sazia
La sete tua, perch' io più non ti scopra,

\(^h\) non esce Gg.
\(^i\) c'aspetta Cass. 12345 Ald.; Come l' altra c' acqu. Gg.
\(^k\) risplende Gg.

---

131 See Aristotle Meteor. i. 13.
132 converta, i.e. changes back to water. Cf. vv. 109–111.
135 perché, as v. 58, etc.
not to thee, I will of favour give thee yet a corollary; nor think I that my word will to thee be less precious if beyond promise it go along with thee. Those who in ancient time sang of the age of gold and its happy state, haply in Parnassus dreamt of this place. Here was the root of mankind innocent; here is spring ever, and every fruit; nectar is this of which each speaks."

I turned me quite round then to my poets, and saw that with a smile they had heard the last interpretation. Then to the fair dame I turned again my face.

Darotti un corollario ancor per grazia;¹
Nè credo, che il mio dir ti sia men caro
Se oltre promission teco si spazia.
Quelli ch' anticamente poetaro
L' età dell' oro e suo stato felice,
Forse in Parnaso esto loco sognaro.²
 Qui fu innocente l' umana radice;
Qui primavera sempre, ed ogni frutto;
Nettare è questo di che ciascun dice.
Io mi rivolsi addietro allora tutto
A' miei Poeti, e vidi che con riso
 Udito avevan l' ultimo costrutto:
Poi alla bella donna tornai il viso.

¹ Dirotti Gg.
² segnaro Gg. Cass. (al. sogn.) ; 1245 signaro 3.

¹⁴¹ Daniello quotes Persius Prol. 2: “Nec in bicipiti somniasse Parnasso;” which, except for the sound of the words, does not seem much to the point.
¹⁴² tornai, as usual, with the idea of not merely "turning," but "turning back to a former position."
CANTO XXIX.

ARGUMENT.

They proceed along the banks of the stream, which presently turns to the eastward, and of a sudden perceive a bright light and a sweet music. There appears a wondrous pageant, preceded by seven candlesticks, a car drawn by a Grifon, and escorted by four-and-twenty elders and four beasts, with other personages. They halt opposite to where the poets stand.

SINGING, as a dame enamoured, she went on with her final words, Beati quorum tecta sunt peccata. And like nymphs who used to go solitary through the wooded shades, desiring one to fly, one to behold the sun, so she then moved against

CANTANDO come donna innamorata,
Continuò col fin di sue parole:
Beati quorum tecta sunt peccata:
E come Ninfe che si givan sole*
Per le salvatiche ombre, disiando Qual di fuggir, qual di veder lo sole;

* che seguivan Gg.

3 Psalm xxxii. 1.
the stream, going up along the bank, and I abreast of her, following with little steps her little steps. There were not a hundred paces between hers and mine, when the banks made a turn equally, in such wise that I again set myself toward the sunrising. Nor thus, too, had our way been long when the lady turned wholly towards me, saying: "My brother, look and listen." And lo, a brightness suddenly rushed from all quarters through the great forest such that it set me questioning of lightning. But whereas of the

Allor si mosse contra il fiume, andando
Su per la riva, ed io pari di lei,
Picciol passo con picciol seguitando.
Non eran cento tra i suoi passi e i miei,
Quando le ripe igualmente dier volta, 10
Per modo ch' a levante mi rendei.
Nè anche fu così nostra via molta,
Quando la donna tutta a me si torse,
Dicendo: Frate mio, guarda ed ascolta.
Ed ecco un lustro subito trascorse
Da tutte parti per la gran foresta,
Tal che di balenar mi mise in forse.b

b mis e in f. Cg.

7 They now turn to the south, and go less than fifty paces each (l. 10) in that direction, when they reach a bend in the stream, and face eastward. They go a little further (ll. 13, 46), when Dante finally halts (l. 70), and remains standing on the bank until he is taken through the river by Matilda (xxxii. 94). Vellutello thinks that the turn to the right denotes application to good works, and the return to the east the renewal of contemplation.

18 mi mise in forse. So Inf. viii. 110. See also note to iii. 37.
lightning the stay is even as the coming, and this continuing, kept shining more and more, I began to say within my thought: "What thing is this?" And a sweet melody was running through the luminous air, wherefore a good zeal made me reproach the boldness of Eve; that there, where heaven and earth were obedient, a woman alone, and she but lately formed, did not endure to stay under any veil; under the which if she had stayed devout, I should have felt these ineffable delights ere now, and after for a long time.

While I was going along among such firstfruits of the Ma perché il balenar, come vien, resta,

E quel durando più e più splendeva,
Nel mio pensar dicea: Che cosa è questa?
Ed una melodia dolce correva
Per l' aer luminoso: onde buon zelo
Mi fe' riprender l' ardimento d' Eva;
Chè, là dove ubbidia la terra e il Cielo,
Femmina sola, e pur testè formata,
Non sopperse di star sotto alcun velo:
Sotto il qual se divota fosse stata,
Avrei quelle ineffabili delizie
Sentite prima, e poi lunga fiata.
Mentr' io m' andava tra tante primizie

\[c \text{ Quella disubbidid Gg.}\]
\[d \text{ prima e più Gg. 1234 W.; prima più Cass.}\]

\[29 \text{ come vien, i.e. momentarily.}\]
\[36 \text{ testè. In longer form testeso, xxi. 113. From ante istud ipsum according to Diez iii. 436. Boccaccio and Sacchetti use it also of the immediate future. In Inf. vi. 69, and Par. xix. 7 it is present.}\]
\[39 \text{ I.e. through this life and the next.}\] eternal pleasure, all in suspense and desirous yet for more joys, before us the air became to us even as a burning fire under the green branches, and the sweet sound was already perceived for a chant. O most holy Virgins, if fasts, cold, or watches I have ever endured for you, occasion spurs me to claim reward therefore. Now it behoves that Helicon pour forth for me and that Urania aid me with her choir to put in verse things mighty to conceive.

A little further on the long interval which was still between us and them made falsely in appearance seven

Dell’ eterno piacer, tutto sospeso,
E disioso ancora a più letizie,
Dinanzi a noi, tal quale un fuoco acceso
Ci si fe’ l’ aer, sotto i verdi rami,
E il dolce suon per canto era già inteso.
O sacrosante Vergini, se fami,
Freddi, o vigilie mai per voi soffersi,
Cagion mi sprona ch’ io mercè ne chiami.
Or convien ch’ Elicona per me versi,
E Urania m’ aiuti col suo coro,
Forti cose a pensar mettere in versi.
Poco più oltre sette alberi d’ oro
Falsava nel parere il lungo tratto
Del mezzo, ch’ era ancor tra noi e loro:

* arbore 23 W.

42 Cf. Milton’s “Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.” Par. L. i. 16. Bianchi can hardly be right in understanding ed a before mettere, and taking both this and pensar as dependent on aiuti, though Philalethes seems to take the same view: “Das Schwerer ich erdenk.”
masts of gold; but when I was so near them that the common object, which cheats the sense, lost not through distance any of its features, the faculty which gathers arguments for reason apprehended them as they were—candle-

Ma quando i' fui sì presso di lor fatto,
   Che l' obbietto comun, che il senso inganna,!
Non perdea per distanza alcun suo atto;
La virtù ch' a ragion discorso ammanna,
   Sl com' elli eran candelabri apprese,

   che l'obbico 14; com' uom Gg. (margin cammin).

47 l' obbietto comun. So Conv. iv. 8: "nelli sensibili comuni, là dove il senso spesse volto è ingannato." This use of the expression seems here to be founded on a misunderstanding of "τὸ κοινὸν," in De Animā ii. 6. Aristotle uses it of such attributes as may be perceived by more than one sense, as motion, number, size, etc.; Dante is speaking of attributes common to more than one object of sense, which are the first to be perceived, and thus cause mistakes. In the present case candlesticks and masts (not, I think, "trees," as Philalethes renders), have the common property of height, straightness, etc. The distinguishing characteristics, e.g. colour, are regarded as attributes laid upon the obietto comun, as features upon the face; atto being used much as in xxiv. 27.

49 la virtù. Philalethes takes this to be the intellect, which enables the reason to express its conclusions by means of speech, since it gives it its material, viz. the species intelligibiles. It seems better, however, to take it in the more restricted sense of the "apprehensive" faculty (xviii. 22), which collects the evidence given by the senses, and passes it on for the reason to pronounce upon it. (De Animā iii. 3. Cf. Ozanam, Dante, Part II. chap. iii. §§ 1, 2.) Cf. Hamlet i. 2: "A beast that wants discourse of reason." "Discursus," says Aquinas, "est motus sive progressus mentis ab uno judicio ad alium," or more properly, the progress from two concerted judgements to a third resulting from their connection, a syllogism; the materials for it being given by "apprehensio." sticks, and in the voices of the chanting—Hosanna. On high was flaming the fair equipment, far brighter than the Moon in a clear sky at midnight in her mid-month. I turned me back full of wonder to the good Virgil, and he answered me with a look charged no less with astonishment. Then I set my face again to the lofty objects which were moving to meet us so slowly that they would have been overcome by new-wedded brides. The lady cried to me: "Why turnest thou thus in thy desire only towards the living lights, and that which comes behind them regardest not?" Then saw I folk, as after their guides, come behind, clad in white, and

E nelle voci del cantare Osanna.\(^b\)
Di sopra fiammeggiava il bello arnese
Più chiaro assai, che luna per sereno
Di mezza notte nel suo mezzo mese.
Io mi rivolsi d' ammirazion pieno
Al buon Virgilio, ed esso mi rispose
Con vista carca di stupor non meno.
Indi rendei l' aspetto all' alte cose,
Che si movieno incontro a noi sì tardi,
Che foran vinte da novelle spose.

La donna mi sgridò: Perchè pur ardi
Sì nell' affetto delle vive luci,\(^1\)
E ciò che vien diretto a lor non guardi?
Genti vid' io allor, com' a lor duci,
Venire appresso, vestite di bianco:

\(^b\) nelle bocche Gg.  \(^1\) nell' aspetto Gg. Cass. 14 W.; effetto 2.

\(^{51}\) "Alla nobile anima si fanno incontro ad osannare quelli cittadin dell' eterna vita," Conv. iv. 28, ed. Giuliani.

\(^{52}\) affetto, as in xviii. 57. Land. seems to read prime for vive.
such whiteness never was there in this world. The water was shining on the left flank, and returned to me my left side if I gazed in it, even like a mirror. When on my bank I had such position, that only the river separated me, to see better I gave a halt to my steps, and I saw the flames go forward, leaving behind them the air painted; and

E tal candor giama' di qua non fuci.
L' acqua splendeva dal sinistro fianco,
E rendea a me la mia sinistra costa,
S' io riguardava in lei, come specchio anco.
Quand' io dalla mia riva ebbi tal posta,
Che solo il fiume mi facea distante,
Per veder meglio a' passi diedi sosta:
E vidi le fiammelle andare avante,
Lasciando dietro a sè l' aer dipinto,

k L'acqua imprendea Gg. Cass. 15; prendea 4; prendeami 3. rendea mi Gg. 134; rendeame Cass.

67 The reading splendeva is the most intelligible, and the one adopted by most editors from Aldus downward, though called by Scarabelli (according to Barlow, Seicento Lezioni, p. 47), "un grosso errore." The usual rule, to look with suspicion on the easier reading, is somewhat modified here by the presence of rendea in the next line, and the possibility that this having been inserted here by a very common copyist's blunder may have given rise to the prendea readings. The Venice ed. of 1578 has impiendea, and pendea is found in some MSS. Ought we not to read impendeva: "I hung over the water"? Otherwise line 68 seems to involve a lack of Dante's usual accuracy about details, for no one could see his own left side reflected in a stream without bending over it. Scartazzini adopts splendeva without remark, which is curious, as he seldom misses an opportunity of girding at Scarabelli. It is not impossible that the whole passage from l. 64 is corrupt. The repetition of a lor—allor—a lor is awkward, as is also the position of anco at the end of l. 69.
they had the semblance of pencils drawn along, so that above them it remained distinct with seven bands, all in those colours whereof the sun makes his bow and Delia her girdle. To the rearward these banners were too great for my sight; and as far as I could judge, ten paces were apart those on the outside. Under so fair a sky as I devise, four-and-twenty elders, two by two, were coming, crowned with lily flowers. They all were singing: “Blessed thou among the daughters of Adam, and blessed be for ever thy beauties.” After that the flowers and the other fresh

E di tratti pennelli avea sembiante,
Sì che di sopra rimanea distinto
Di sette liste, tutte in que’ colori,
Onde fa l’ arco il Sole, e Delia il cinto.
Questi stendali dietro eran maggiori
Che la mia vista: e quanto a mio avviso
Dieci passi distavan quei di fuori.
Sotto così bel ciel, com’ io diviso,
Venti quattro seniori, a due a due,
Coronati venian di fiordaliso.
Tutti cantavan: Benedetta tue
Nelle figlie d’ Adamo, e benedette
Sieno in eterno le bellezze tue.
Poscia che i fiori e l’ altre fresche erbette,

75 It seems best to take pennelli, with the older commentators, in the same sense as it has in xii. 64, though its use in the sense of “pennons” is not unknown. But the likening of the flames to painters’ brushes, drawn along and leaving a band of colour behind, is quite in Dante’s manner.
78 Rainbow and lunar halo (Par. x. 67). As to the interpretation of these bands, and of the whole pageant, see Appendix B.
herbage abreast of me, on the other bank, were clear of those elect folk, just as light follows light in heaven, came after them four living creatures crowned each with green leaves. Each one had six feathered wings, the feathers full of eyes; and the eyes of Argus, if they were living, would be such. To describe their form I scatter rhymes no more, reader, for other expense binds me so, that in this I cannot be lavish. But read Ezekiel, for he depicts them as he saw them come from the cold quarter with wind, with cloud, and with fire; and such as thou shalt find them in his

A rimpetto di me dall' altra sponda,
Libere fur da quelle genti elette,
Si come luce luce in ciel seconda,
Vennero appresso lor quattro animali,
Coronati ciascun di verde fronda. 90
Ognuno era pennuto di sei ali,
Le penne piene d' occhi; e gli occhi d' Argo,
Se fosser vivi, sarebbero cotali.
A descriver lor forma più non spargo
Rime, lettor; ch' altra spesa mi stringe
Tanto, che in questa non posso esser largo.
Ma leggi Ezechiel, che li dipinge 100
Come li vide dalla fredda parte
Venir con vento con nube e con igne:
E quai li troverai nelle sue carte,

m Coronato W. Bi.

94 pennuto di ali. Cf. the Greek constr. e.g. ἀπειλως φαρέων, πολυτετεφής δάφνης.
100 Ezekiel i. 4. In v. 6 he says: "Every one had four wings." The "four beasts" seen by St. John, Rev. iv. 8, "had each of them six wings about him;" hence Dante's remark in l. 105.
book, such were they here, save that as to the wings John is with me, and separates from him. The space between them four contained a car upon two wheels, triumphal, which came drawn by the neck of a Grifon; and he was stretcing up his wings one and the other between the midmost band and the three and three, so that to no one, by cleaving it, did he do harm. They rose so high that they were out of sight; he had his limbs of gold so far as he was bird, and white the others with vermilion mingled.
Not only did Rome never rejoice with car so fair Africanus or Augustus, but that of the Sun would be poor beside it;

Tali eran quivi, salvo ch’alle penne
Giovanni è meco, e da lui si diparte.
Lo spazio dentro a lor quattro contenne
Un carro in suo ruote trionfale,
Ch’al collo d’ un Grifon tirato venne:
Ed esso tendea su l’ una e l’ altr’ ale,
Tra la mezzana e le tre e tre liste,
Sl ch’ a nulla fendendo facea male.\textsuperscript{a}

Tanto salivan che non eran viste:
Le membra d’ oro avea quant’ era uccello,
E bianche l’ altre di vermiglio miste.
Non che Roma di carro così bello
Rallegrasse Africano, o vero Augusto:
Ma quel del Sol saria pover con ello:

\textsuperscript{a} offending Cass.; che nullo off. 14.

\textsuperscript{109} I.e. the middle band was between his wings, which passed along in the spaces between that and the third and fifth.
\textsuperscript{110} salivan, sc. his wings.
\textsuperscript{113} 114 Canticles v. 10, 11.
that of the Sun which going astray was burnt, through the prayer of the devoted Earth, when Jove was in his hidden counsels just. Three ladies, whirling on the right wheel's side, came dancing, the one so red, that hardly would she have been marked within the fire; the second was as if her flesh and bones had been made out of emerald; the third appeared snow but lately driven. And now they seemed led by the white, now by the red, and from her chant the others took both slow and quick their pace. On the left side four made holiday, clad in purple, following the fashion of one of them who had three eyes in her head. After all the afore-mentioned group I saw two old men unlike in habit, but like in feature, both dignified and grave. The one showed

Quel del Sol, che sviando fu combusto,
Per l' orazion della Terra devota,
Quando fu Giove arcanamente giusto.:

Tre donne in giro dalla destra ruota
Venian danzando, l' una tanto rossa,
Ch' a pena fora dentro al fuoco nota;
L' altr' era, come se le carni e l' ossa
Fossero state di smeraldo fatte;
La terza parea neve testè mossa:

Ed or parevano dalla bianca tratte,
Or dalla rossa, e dal canto di questa
L' altre toglièn l' andare e tarde e ratte.

Dalla sinistra quattro facean festa,
In porpora vestite dietro al modo
D' una di lor, ch' avea tre occhi in testa.

Appresso tutto il pertrattato nodo,
Vidi duo vecchi in abito dispari,
Ma pari in atto ed onestato e sodo.

120 Cf. vi. 121, xx. 95.
himself one of the familiars of that great Hippocrates whom nature made for the animals that she holds dearest. The other showed the contrary care, with a sword bright and keen, such that on the hither side of the stream it gave me fear. Afterward saw I four in humble guise, and behind all a solitary old man come sleeping with his countenance undimmed. And these seven were habited as the first band; but they made not a garden of lilies around their heads;

L’ un si mostrava alcun de’ famigliari
Di quel sommo Ippocrate, che natura
Agli animali fe’ ch’ ella ha più cari.
Mostrava l’ altro la contraria cura,
Con una spada lucida ed acuta,
   Tal che di qua del rio mi fe’ paura.
Poi vidi quattro in umile paruta,
   E diretro da tutti un veglio solo
Venir, dormendo, con la faccia arguta.
E questi sette come il prima’ sto uolu
Erano abituati; ma di gigli
Dintorno al capo non facevan brolo;

136 L’un, St. Luke, as author of the Acts. Famigliari, i.e. physicians.
138 I.e. mankind.
139 L’altro, St. Paul. Contraria cura, because the sword slays.
143 un veglio, St. John, as author of the Apocalypse.
145 The usual reading is col primato, but this leaves a syllable wanting, for the termination -aio reckons as one syllable only, e.g. Inf. vi. 79, xiv. 66. I have therefore ventured to make the slight change in the text.
rather of roses and other vermilion flowers. Seeing them from a short distance one would have sworn that they were all on fire from the eyebrows upward. And when the car was abreast of me a thundering was heard, and those worshipful folk appeared to have their further advance forbidden, halting there with the first ensigns.

Anzi di rose e d’altri fior vermigli:
Giurato avria poco lontano aspetto,
Che tutti ardesser di sopra dai cigli.
E quando il carro a me fu a rimpetto,
Un tuon s’udì; e quelle genti degne
Parvero aver l’andar più interdetto,
Femandos’ ivi con le prime insegne.

148 anzi, Fr. ains (a word which has unfortunately become obsolete). The signification is precisely the same as our “rather” (= “sooner”); ma, mais (magis), being of course “more.”

149 Lit. “a look at no great distance would have sworn.”
CANTO XXX.

ARGUMENT.

Beatrice appears, standing on the car, amid the flowers which the angels strew. Virgil has disappeared; and she calls upon Dante by name, and while he weeps at the sight of her, she recounts to those around her how he has fallen away from the promise of his early life, and how she has caused him to make this journey for his salvation.

When the wain of the first heaven, which never knew setting nor rising, nor veil of other cloud than sin, and

Quando il settentrion del primo cielo,
Che nè occaso mai seppe nè orto,
Nè d’ altra nebbia che di colpa velo:

setteentrio is usually understood of the seven candlesticks. Landino indeed says: “La sententia è, quando s’ affisse e fermò il carro,” and so P. di Dante; and the marginal reading of the Duke of Sermonta’s Codex, given by Witte, cert for tra, in line 8, if it could be supposed to be the correct reading, would make this clearly right. In some ways it is more satisfactory than the ordinary interpretation; because it is rather the Church (denoted by the car), than the seven gifts of the Spirit, which may be regarded as teaching men their duty; also the parallel of the “Wain” is better preserved. In default, however, of more MS. authority, the usual explanation must be taken. In that case suo dower means merely “the way they were to go.” primo cielo must here = the Empyrean heaven, usually reckoned as the tenth. Bianchi’s “il cielo del Paradiso terrestre” can hardly be right.
which was there making each one acquainted with his duty, as that lower one makes whoso turns the helm to come to port, fixed itself at a halt, all that truthful folk who first had come between the Grifon and it, turned to the car as to their peace; and one of them, as though sent from heaven, singing, cried thrice: "Veni, sponsa de Libano," and all the others after him. As the blessed at the last proclamation shall rise ready every one from his own cavern, singing

E che faceva il ciascuno accorto
Di suo dover, come il più basso face
Qual timon gira per venire a porto,
Fermo s' affisse; la gente verace
Venuta prima tra il Grifone ed esso,
Al carro volse sè, come a sua pace.
E un di loro quasi da ciel messo,
Veni, sponsa de Libano, cantando,
Griddò tre volte, e tutti gli altri appresso,
Quali i beati al novissimo bando
Surgeran presti, ognun di sua caverna,
La rivestita voce alleluiano, a

5 il piu basso. The real constellation of the Wain, which is in the eighth heaven.

6 Dante appears to use the form timone only of the helm of a rudder, the pole of a cart being temo.

7 la gente verace, i.e. the twenty-four elders, denoting the Old Testament writers, who prophesied.

10 uno. Solomon. The words he utters are from Canticles iv. 8.

15 carne, for voce, is probably an importation from Par. xiv. 43. I have followed Bianchi and the Germans in preferring alleluiano, which, besides giving a far finer image, is much more likely to have been corrupted into than from the easier alleviando. Comm. Gg. has: "i.e. cum gaudio cantando alleluia." For the constr. see Diez iii. p. 107, and compare arridere un cenno, Par. xv. 71.
CANTO XXX. Purgatory. 373

Hallelujah in the voice which they have again put on, such upon the divine chariot, uprose a hundred, ad vocem tanti sensis, ministers and messengers of life eternal. All were saying: Benedictus qui venis, and casting flowers above and all around, Manibus o date lilia plenis. I have seen ere now at the beginning of the day the eastern quarter all rosy, and the rest of heaven beautiful with fair clear sky, and the face of the sun rise shadowed, so that through tempering of vapours the eye sustained it a long time; so within a cloud of flowers which was rising from the angelic hands and falling down again within and without, crowned

Cotali, in su la divina basterna,
Si levar cento, ad vocem tanti sensis,
Ministri e messaggier di vita eterna.
Tutti dicean: Benedictus qui venis,
E fior gittando di sopra e dintorno,
Manibus o date lilia plenis. 20
Io vidi già nel cominciare del giorno
La parte oriental tutta rosata,
E l’ altro ciel di bel sereno adorno:
E la faccia del Sol nascere ombra,
Si che per temperanza di vapori,
L’ occhio lo sostenea lunga siata:
Così dentro una nuvola di fiori,
Che dalle mani angeliche saliva,
E ricadeva giù dentro e di fuori, 30

77 “at the voice of so great an elder.”
82 Aen. vi. 884. In order to scan this and other Latin lines in Dante every syllable must be given the value of its position.
83 rosata. Bianchi says “sparsa di rugiada,” and so “misty;” but there seems no authority for the word in this sense; and, besides, rosata ought, on the analogy of Fr. roste, to mean “dew,” not “dewy.”
with olive over a white veil appeared a lady, clad under green mantle with colour of living flame. And my spirit—for already had it been so long a time without being in her presence broken down, trembling, with wonder—without having more cognisance by the eyes, through hidden virtue which moved from her, felt the great power of an ancient love. Soon as the high virtue smote me on the face, which already had pierced me ere I was forth of boyhood,
I turned me round to the left with that regard wherewith

Sovra candido vel cinta d’ oliva
Donna m’ apparve, sotto verde manto
Vestita di color di fiamma viva.
E lo spirito mio, che già cotanto
Tempo era stato ch’ alla sua presenza
Non era di stupor tremando affranto,
Sanzo degli occhi aver più conoscenza,
Per occulta virtù che da lei mosse,
D’ antico amor sentì la gran potenza.
Tosto che nella vista mi percosse
L’ alta virtù, che già m’ avea trafitto
Prima ch’ io fuor di puerizia fosse;
Volsimi alla sinistra col rispetto,

b cholla sua Gg.; con la sua 35 Ald.  c nella vita Gg.

31 Notice the colours in which Beatrice is clad, which recur frequently, and denote the three theological virtues, as is seen in the last canto. They are also those used by Giotto in painting Dante’s own portrait on the wall of the Bargello at Florence, but were changed for political reasons after the discovery of the picture in 1840, as being the colours chosen for the flag of Italian unity.
36 Cf. Vita Nuova, § ii. and the sonnet in § xxi. So, too, Conv. ii. 8.
41, 42 Dante was nine years old when he first saw Beatrice.
the infant runs to his mother when he is frightened or when he is in trouble, to say to Virgil: "Less than a dram of blood remains to me which trembles not; I recognise the signs of the ancient flame." But Virgil had left us shorn of himself; Virgil my sweetest father; Virgil to whom for my salvation I gave myself; nor whatsoever the ancient mother lost availed to my cheeks, cleansed as they were with dew, that with weeping they should not turn foul again.

"Dante, for all that Virgil goes his way, weep not now,

Col quale il fantolin corre alla mamma,
Quando ha paura o quando egli è afflitto,"
Per dicere a Virgilio: Men che dramma
Di sangue m' è rimasa, che non tremi;
Conosco i segni dell' antica fiamma.
Ma Virgilio n' avea lasciati scemi.
Di sè, Virgilio dolcissimo padre,
Virgilio, a cui per mia salute die' mi:
Nè quantunque perdèo l' antica madre,
Valse alle guance nette di rugiada,
Che lagrimando non tornassero adre.
Dante, perchè Virgilio se ne vada,

48 Aen. iv. 23: "Agnosco veteris vestigia flammæ."
51 diè 'mi. We should have expected the m to be doubled; but cf. xiv. 76.
52 quantunque, etc., all the beauties of the earthly Paradise.
53 nette di rugiada. Not, I think, as Bianchi explains, "non lacrimose," but with allusion to i. 127. Philalethes, "thauge-waschnen," which seems better.
55 The only mention of Dante's name throughout the poem; see 63, and cf. Conv. i. 2, Aristotle, Rhet. iii. 17, § 15.
weep not yet awhile; seeing it behoves thee to weep for other wound." As an admiral, who on poop and on prow comes to see the folk that are serving throughout the other vessels and encourages them to do well, upon the left rim of the car—when I turned round at the sound of my own name, which of necessity here is registered—I saw the dame who first appeared to me veiled beneath the greeting of the angels, direct her eyes towards me on my side of the stream. For all that the veil, which descended from her head, circled with the leaf of Minerva, did not allow her to appear manifest, royally, in her mien still haughty she continued,

Non pianger anco, non piangere ancora,
Chè pianger ti convien per altra spada.
Quasi ammiraglio, che in poppa ed in prora
Viene a veder la gente che ministra
Per gli altri legni, ed a ben far la incuora,
In su la sponda del carro sinistra,
Quando mi volsi al suon del nome mio,
Che di necessità qui si registra,
Vidi la Donna che prià m’ apparìo,
Velata sotto l’ angelica festa,
Drizzar gli occhi ver me di qua dal rio.
Tutto che il vel che le scendea di testa,
Cerchiato dalla fronde di Minerva,
Non la lasciasse parer manifesta:

Tutto quel v. Gg.; nel v. Cass.

sponda. See note to xiii. 81. The car is probably imagined as having a kind of bulwark round it, on the flat top of which she stands.

festa, as in vi. 81, xxvi. 33. Here it alludes to the flowers which the angels scatter.
as one who speaks and keeps back his strongest word:
"Look at me well; I am, ay, I am Beatrice; how deignedst thou to approach the mount? Knewest thou not that here the man is happy?" My eyes dropped down to the clear fount, but seeing myself in it I drew them toward the grass, so great shame lay heavy on my brow. In such wise the mother to the son seems proud, as she appeared to me, because the savour of her stern pity has a taste of bitter.

Regalmente nell’ atto ancor proterva
Continuò, come colui che dice
E il più caldo parlar dietro riserva:
Guardaci ben; ben sem, ben sem Beatrice:
Come degnasti d’ accedere al monte?
Non sapei tu, che qui è l’ uom felice?
Gli occhi mi cadd’ in giù nel chiaro fonte;
Ma veggendomi in esso, io trassi all’ erba,
Tanta vergogna mi gravò la fronte.
Così la madre al figlio par superba,
Com’ ella parve a me; perchè d’amaro
Sente il sapor della pietate acerba.

1 Guardami ben sio son 5; mi ... son ... son Ald. Land. Bi.;
ce ... son ... son W.

70 Bianchi quotes Conv. iii. 15: "Essa Filosofia parea a me fiera," etc.
73 I have followed the reading which has by far the most authority.
The use of the plural may be taken as continuing the idea of "regal-mente."
74 Ironical: "how was it that you thought it worth while?" The next line of course drops the irony.
79-81 Cf. Petr. Tri. della M. ii. 93, "Nè per ferza è però madre men pia."
80-81 d’amaro sente; so, "sa di sale" Par. xvii. 58. Diez appears to have overlooked this construction, which is, however, recognised by Corticelli, book ii. chap. 4. Witte, following Aldus, reads senti.
She held her peace, and the angels sang on a sudden: In te, Domine, speravi; but beyond pedes meos they passed not. As snow among the living beams along the backbone of Italy congeals, blown on and bound close by the winds of Slavonia, afterwards melting filters through into itself, so only that the land which loses shadow breathe, in such wise that it seems fire melting the candle, just so was I without tears or sighs before the chanting of those who are

Ella si tacque, e gli Angeli cantaro
Di subito: In te, Domine, speravi,
Ma oltre pedes meos non passaro.
Sì come neve tra le vive travi
Per lo dosso d’ Italia si congela,
Soffiata e stretta dalli venti Schiavi,
Poi liquefatta in sè stessa trapela,
Pur che la terra che perde ombra spiri,
Sì che par fuoco fonder la candela:

Così fui senza lagrime e sospiri
Anzi il cantar di quei che notan sempre

83 Psalm xxxi. to the end of verse 9. The following verses, as Philalethes remarks, would be out of place here.
85 vive travi, the trees. So Ovid Met. viii. 329. “Silva frequens trabibus.” (It also occurs Aen. ix. 87, but the line is probably spurious.)
86 dosso. The Apennine.
87 venti Schiavi. North-east winds from the Dalmatian mountains. M. Villani xi. 60, “Un vento Schiavo temperato.”
89 la terra che perde ombra is the torrid zone, within which the Sun is vertically overhead twice in each year, so that the shadow is “lost.”
90 The construction is curious; it seems to be a sort of confusion between “fuoco par fondere,” and “par fuoco che fonde.”
CANTO XXX.

ever quiring after the notes of the eternal circles; but when I heard in their sweet harmonies their sympathy with me, more than if they had said: "Lady, why dost thou so distemper him?" the frost which had been tight bound around my heart became breath and water, and with anguish through the mouth and eyes issued from my breast. She, standing ever unmoved on the aforesaid flank of the car, next turned her words to the pious substances in this wise: "Ye watch in the eternal day so that night nor sleep

Dietro alle note degli eterni giri;
Ma poiché intesi nelle dolci tempre
Lor compatire a me, più che se detto $^8$
Avesser: Donna, perché si lo stempre?
Lo giel che m' era intorno al cuor ristretto,
Spirito ed acqua fessi, e con angoscia
Per la bocca e per gli occhi usci del petto.
Ella, pur ferma in su la detta coscia $^b$
Del carro stando, alle sustanzie pie
Volse le sue parole così poscia:
Voi vigilate nell' eterno die,
Sì che notte nè sonno a voi non fura

$^8$ par ch' esse d. Gg.; come s' 2. 3; pari che se 14.
$^b$ destra coscia Gg. Ald. Land.

---

93 Cf. Merchant of Venice, act v. sc. 1. There is another reading, rote, perhaps suggested by xix. 63, and l. 109.
100 detta, the left, see l. 61. Land. and Vell. with others of the early edd. and some MSS. read destra, which is clearly wrong. The woodcut in the Venice ed. of 1578 correctly represents Beatrice as standing on the left edge of the car.
102 sustanzie, as in Par. vii. 5, and elsewhere. It is, of course, in the metaphysical sense. See note to xviii. 49.
steals from you a step which the age may make upon its ways; wherefore my reply is with more care that he may hear me who is weeping on the other bank, so that fault and sorrow may be of one measure. Not only by operation of the mighty wheels, which direct every seed to some end, according as the stars accompany; but by largess of divine graces, which have to their rain clouds so lofty that our sight comes not there a-nigh, this man was such in his new life, potentially, that every right habit would have made in him a wondrous example. But all the more malign and the

Passo, che faccia il secol per sue vie:
Onde la mia risposta è con più cura,
Che m' intenda colui che di là piagne,
Perchè sia colpa e duol d' una misura.
Non pur per ovra delle ruote magne,
Che drizzan ciascun seme ad alcun fine,
Secondo che le stelle son compagne:
Ma per larghezza di grazie divine,
Che sì alti vapori hanno a lor piova,
Che nostre viste là non van vicine;
Questi fu tal nella sua vita nuova
Virtualmente, ch' ogni abito destro
Fatto avrebbe in lui mirabil pruova.
Ma tanto più maligno e più silvestro

111 Cf. xvi. 73.
115 vita nuova here, as in the title of Dante's work, means simply "young life," or what he elsewhere denotes by "adolescenza." See Conv. iv. 24, where he fixes its limit at the age of twenty-five. After this begins the second age, or "gioventute." more wild becomes the ground with bad seed and uncultivated, the more of good force it has of the earth. A certain time I stayed him with my countenance; showing my young eyes to him I led him with me turned to the right part. So soon as I was on the threshold of my second age, and changed life, this man took himself from me and gave himself to another. When I was risen from flesh to spirit, and beauty and virtue had increased upon me, I was to him less

Si fa il terren col mal seme e non colto,
Quant’egli ha più di buon vigor terrestro. 120
Alcun tempo il sostenni col mio volto;
Mostrando gli occhi giovinetti a lui,
Meco il menava in dritta parte volto.
Si tosto come in su la soglia fui
Di mia seconda etade e mutai vita,
Questi si tose a me e diessi altrui.
Quando di carne a spirto era salita,
E bellezza e virtù cresciuta m’era,

119 Comparing Conv. iv. 21: “Se questo (l’animo) non è bene culto e sostenuto diritto per buona consuetudine, poco vale la sementa, e meglio sarebbe non esser seminato,” one is tempted to suggest “il terreno col mal seme colto.”

124, 125 Beatrice died June 9, 1290 (Vita Nuova, § xxx.). She was then in her twenty-fifth year, and therefore, as explained in the last note, close on the beginning of the “second age.” mutai vita, like “mutastì mondo,” xxiii. 77.

126 What the literal meaning of this charge may be, we cannot now say. It can hardly refer to Dante’s marriage, which, according to medieval notions, would not be incompatible with continued fidelity to Beatrice, herself a married woman. That there is an allusion to some amour, more or less discreditable, must I think be admitted. Cf.
xxxii. 61; and see note to xxvii. 49. Allegorically no doubt Dante is reproached for turning away from a life of study and contemplation to the business and pleasures of the world. The year in which the action of the D.C. is placed that in which he was Prior.
dear and less acceptable; and he turned his steps on a way that was not true, following false images of good which give back no promise unbroken. Nor did it avail me to obtain inspirations, with the which both in dreams and otherwise I recalled him; so little heed had he of them. So low he fell that all means were already too short for his salvation, apart from showing him the lost folk. For this I visited the gate of the dead, and to him who has brought him up hither my prayers, in my weeping, were borne. God's

Fu' io a lui men cara e men gradita:
E volse i passi suoi per via non vera,
Immagini di ben seguendo false,
Che nulla promission rendono intera.
Nè impetrare spirazion mi valse,¹
Con le quali ed in sogno ed altrimenti
Lo rivocai: sì poco a lui ne calse.
Tanto giù cadde, che tutti argomenti
Alla salute sua eran già corti,
Fuor che mostrargli le perdute genti.
Per questo visitai l' uscio de' morti,
Ed a colui che l' ha quassù condotto, ¹⁴⁰
Li prieghi miei piangendo furon porti.
L' alto fato di Dio sarebbe rotto,

¹ impetrare (alt from -ate) Gg.; l'impetrare Cass. 3.

¹³⁴ sogno. Cf. the frequent dreams of the Vita Nuova.
¹³⁵ argomenti: in much the same sense as in ii. 31, only rather more extended.
¹⁴⁰ For this use of rotto, cf. i. 46.
high destiny would be broken if Lethe were passed and such viand were tasted without any scot of repentance which may pour forth tears."

Se Lete si passasse, e tal vivanda
Fosse gustata senza alcuno scotto
Di pentimento che lagrime spanda.
CANTO XXXI.

ARGUMENT.

Beatrice continues to upbraid Dante, speaking now directly to him. He makes confession of his fault; after which Matilda draws him through the water of Lethe, and he is led to the place where Beatrice is standing. She unveils herself, and he is ravished with her beauty.

"O thou that art on that side the sacred stream," turning to me with its point her speech, which even with the edge had seemed keen to me, she began again, pursuing without delay, "say, say if this is true; to such accusation it behoves that thy confession be attached." My power was so confounded that the voice moved, and was extinct

O tu, che se' di là dal fiume sacro,
Volgendlo suo parlare a me per punta, a
Che pur per taglio m' era parut' acro,
Ricominciò seguendo senza cunta,
Di', di', se quest' è vero: a tanta accusa
Tua confession conviene esser congiunta.
Era la mia virtù tanto confusa,
Che la voce si mosse, e pria si spense,

a sue parole Gg.
before it was unloosed from its organs. A little while she suffered it, then said: "What thinkest thou? Answer me, for the sad memories in thee have not yet been washed out by the water." Confusion and fear together mingled forced such a "Yes" forth from my mouth that to hear it the eyes were needed. As an arbaelest breaks, when it shoots at too great stretch, its own cord and the bow, and with less

Che dagli organi suoi fosse dischiussa.
Poco sofferse, poi disse: Che pense?
Rispondi a me; che le memorie triste
In te non sono ancor dall' acqua offense.
Confusione e paura insieme miste
Mi pinsero un tal Si fuor della bocca,
Al quale intender fur mestier le viste.
Come balesto frange, quando scocca
Da troppa tesa, la sua corda e l' arco,
E con men foga l' asta il segno tocca,

12 offense. It is not easy to see the force of this word here. Blanc explains it by "tormentato," with what idea I do not understand. Bianchi, following Benvenuto, has "scancellate;" Philalethes "verletzet." Witte merely says "das Wasser hat nicht genommen." Dict. Crusc. quotes the passage between two others where simply "offend" is meant. On the whole it seems best to take it as "come in contact with," "beaten against," as Lat. "offendere," and still more "offensare" (as Lucr. vi. 1053). Indeed, I am inclined to think that both here and Inf. v. 109, it is not from offende, but stands for offensare. It must be said, however, that the word only occurs in rime. The allusion is of course to the water of Lethe.

16 frange. Bianchi and Blanc take this as intrans., but it does not appear to be ever so used by Dante. Philalethes has "sprenget," and this seems best.
violence the bolt touches the mark, so burst I under that heavy burden, sending forth from my throat tears and sighs, and my voice failed in its passage. Wherefore she to me: “Within my desires, which were leading thee to love that good beyond the which there is naught to aspire unto, what trenches across the path or what chains didst thou find, for which thou shouldst thus have to put off the hope of passing further; and what easement or what furthering showed itself in the countenance of the others wherefore thou wert obliged to pass before them?” After the drawing

Sì scoppia’ io sott’ esso grave carco,
Fuori sgorgando lagrime e sospiri,
E la voce allentò per lo suo varco.
Ond’ el’ a me: Per entro i miei desiri,
Che ti menavano ad amar lo bene,
Di là dal qual non è a che s’ aspiri,
Quai fosse attraversate, o quai catene
Trovasti, perché del passare innanzi
Dovessiti così spogliar la spene?
E quali agevolezze, o quali avanzì
Nella fronte degli altri si mostraro,
Perché dovesse lor passeggiar anzi?

27 Per entro. Cf. xxv. 28. i miei desiri. “i.e. desideria quae habebas ad me.”—Comm. Gg.

30 lor passeggiar anzi. No satisfactory explanation of these words has been given. Blanc takes them to mean, “go before, as a servant goes in front of his master,” hence “serve.” Philalethes renders “zu ihnen hinzuwandeln;” Bianchi, “vagheggiar;” Balbo thinks there is an allusion to the coming before the “gentil donna,” of of a bitter sigh hardly had I the voice which answered, and the lips with labour formed it. Weeping, I said: "The present things with their false pleasures turned away my steps soon as your face was hidden." And she: "If thou hadst been silent or hadst denied that which thou confessest, thy fault would not be less, by such a judge is it known;
but when the accusation of the sin bursts from the sinner's own mouth, in our court the wheel turns back against the edge. At all events, that thou mayest better bear shame

Dopo la tratta d' un sospiro amaro,
Appena ebbi la voce che rispose,
E le labbra a fatica la formaro. c
Piangendo dissì: Le presenti cose
Col falso lor piacer volser miei passi,
Tosto che il vostro viso si nascose.
Ed ella: Se tacessi, o se negassi
Ciò che confessi, non fora men nota
La colpa tua: da tal giudice sassi.
Ma quando scoppia dalla propria gota
L' accusa del peccato, in nostra corte,
Rivolge sè contra il taglio la ruota.
Tuttavia perché me' vergogna porte d c la fermo Cass. 1.

d mo verg. Gg. Cass. 145 W.; più v. 23.

V. N. § xxxvi.; but there he goes away from before her; Cary has "that thou elsewhere shouldst rather wait." May we venture to read with the alteration of one letter only, "cargo leggiar anzi," "to toy rather," comparing line 59?

42 The grindstone turns back against that which is being sharpened,
"takes off the edge."

43 I have followed Blanc, Bianchi, and Philalethes in reading me' (= meglio), which has MS. authority, and seems to give a better sense.
for thy error, and that a second time hearing the Sirens thou mayest be stronger, lay aside the seed of weeping and listen; so shalt thou hear how to the contrary part my body buried ought to have moved thee. Never did nature and art present to thee a pleasure so great as the fair members within which I was enclosed, and which are earth, scattered; and if the highest pleasure so failed thee through my death, what mortal thing ought afterwards to have drawn thee into desire of it? Verily oughtest thou at the

Del tuo errore, e perchè altra volta
Udendo le sirene sie più forte,
Pon giù il seme del piangere, ed ascolta;
Sì udirai come in contraria parte
Muover doveai mia carne sepolta.
Mai non t' appresentò natura ed arte
Piacer, quanto le belle membra in ch' io
Rinchiusa fui, e che son terra sparte:
E se il sommo piacer sì ti falllo
Per la mia morte, qual cosa mortale
Dovea poi trarre te nel suo disio?

e sono in terra W.; che sono in Cass.; e che sono in 2.

46 il seme del piangere. Cf. Psalm cxxvi. 7.
51 e che son terra. Witte reads, without apparently much authority, e sono in terra. (What is the nominative to sono?) Fanfani (Voc. Tosc.) s. v. parte, wishes to substitute this, in its Tuscan sense, as in xxi. 19, for sparte, and speaks with some truculence of the usual reading; but he gives no authority for his view, nor does parte seem to be used of present time. Another reading, and perhaps the best, as far as the sense goes, is che son in terra; P. di Dante has "membris meis nunc in terra dispersis." There seems, however, not much difficulty in understanding the usual reading. Philalethes, "und die zerstreut als Staub jetzt," renders it very well.
first arrow of things deceitful to have raised thee on high after me, who was no more of such sort. Nor should have weighed thy wings downwards to await more strokes, either girl or other vanity of so short using. The young bird awaits two or three, but before the eyes of the full-fledged a net is spread in vain or arrow shot.” As boys stand dumb with shame, with their eyes to earth, listening and recol-

Ben ti dovevi per lo primo strale
Delle cose fallaci levar suso
Diretro a me, che non era più tale.
Non ti doveva gravar le penne in giuso
Ad aspettar più colpi, o pargioletta,
O altra vanità con si breve uso.¹

Nuovo augelletto due o tre aspetta;
Ma dinanzi dagli occhi de, pennuti
Rete si spiega indarno o si saetta.
Quali i fanciulli vergognando muti,
Con gli occhi a terra stannosi ascoltando,
E sè riconoscendo, e ripentuti;

¹ altra novitā Gg.

₅₅ per lo primo strale. “Cioè, pel primo colpo che ti dette lo fortuna, quando ti tolse il mio corpo.”—Land. See the next note.
₅⁹ pargioletta. Here, again, it is impossible to say what is the particular allusion. It is only clear that this pargioletta cannot possibly be, as some commentators have hastily assumed, the “femmina” of xxiv. 43, who was still a child. Some understand it of Beatrice herself, as though she were saying that the loss of one maiden ought not so to have affected him, and Philalethes takes the primo strale to mean the loss of her. But it is hard to see how this fits the general tone of her remarks.

₆₂ Prov. i. 17, where the Vulg. has “Frustra jacitur rete ante oculos Pennatorum.”
lecting themselves and penitent, so was I standing. And she said: "Since through hearing thou art grieved, raise thy beard, and thou shalt receive greater grief seeing." With less of resistance is uprooted a stout oak, whether with wind of our land or with that from the land of Iarbas, than did I raise at her command my chin. And when by name of the beard she asked for my visage, well knew I the venom of the argument. And as my face opened itself, the sight understood that those first created beings were resting from their strowing; and my eyes, yet little secure, saw Beatrice

Tal mi stav' io. Ed ella disse: Quando
Per udir se' dolente, alza la barba,
E prenderai più doglia riguardando.
Con men di resistenza si dibaeba
Robusto cerro, o vero a nostral vento,
O vero a quel della terra d' Iarba,
Ch' io non levai al suo comando il mento :
E quando per la barba il viso chiese,
Ben conobbi il velen dell' argomento.
E come la mia faccia si distese,
Posarsi quelle prime creature
Da loro aspersion l' occhio comprese :
E le mie luci, ancor poco sicure,

71 nostral. Philalethes reads austral, which has little authority; though nostral, as denoting a northerly wind, is not very satisfactory. May we read mastral, i.q. maestral, that is, the mistral, or north-west wind, quel d. t. d'Iarba, being the south-east or scirocco?
72 ch' io non levai. For this insertion of the negative in a comparison in the Rom. languages, see Diez iii. 394.
73 Because the allusion was to his mature age.
74 aspersion. Cf. xxx. 20. Crusc. reads apparsion, which has no meaning.
turned towards the animal, who is only one person in two cultures. Under her veil, and beyond the stream, she seemed to me to surpass her ancient self, to surpass it more than, when here she was, the others here. So pricked me then the nettle of penitence that of all other things that which most turned me aside in love of it became most hateful to me. Such recognition gnawed my heart that I felt overcome, and what then became of me she knows who gave me the cause.

Then when my heart restored me my outward functions, the dame whom I had found alone I saw above me, and Vider Beatrice volta in su la fiera,

Ch' è sola una persona in duo nature.
Sotto suo velo, ed oltre la riviera
Vincer pareami più sè stessa antica,\(^8\)
Vincer, che l' altre qui, quand' ella c' era.\(^9\)
Di penter si mi punse ivi l'ortica,
Che di tutt' altre cose, qual mi torse
Più nel suo amor, più mi si fe' nemica.
Tanta riconoscenza il cuor mi morse,
Ch' io caddi vinto, e quale allora femmi,
Salsi colei che la cagion mi porse.

Poi quando il cuor virtù di fuor rendemmi,
La Donna ch' io avea trovata sola,

\(^8\) Verde Ald. Land. Bi.
\(^9\) quell’ altre Gg.

\(^8\), \(^9\) Verde, the reading of most edd. after Aldus, has little or no
MS. authority. Witte's suggestion, "Vincer pareami p. s. s. a. Che vincea l'a." seems good, if supported.

\(^8\) With this swoon compare his unconsciousness before entering Hell (Inf. iii. 135) and Purg. (ix. 59).
she was saying: "Hold me, hold me." She had led me into the stream up to the neck, and drawing me behind her was going her way right over the water, light as a shuttle. When I was near the bank of the blessed, Asperges me I heard so sweetly that I cannot recall it to mind, far less can write it. The fair dame opened her arms, embraced my head, and plunged me under, where it behoved that I swallowed the water; then she took me up, and, bathed, presented me within the dance of the four fair ones, and Sopra me vidi, e dicea: Tiemmi, tiemmi.

Tratto m' avea nel fume infino a gola,
E tirandosi me dietro, sen giva
Sovr' esso l' acqua lieve come spola.¹
Quando fu' presso alla beata riva,
Asperges me sì dolcemente udissi,
Ch' io nol so rimembrar, non ch' io lo scriva.
La bella donna nelle braccia aprissi,
Abbracciammi la testa, e mi sommerse,
Ove convenne ch' io l' acqua inghiottissi;
Indi mi tolse, e bagnato m' offorse
Dentro alla danza delle quattro belle,

¹ stola Gg. Cass. 1234.

96 spola, the shuttle which carries the warp through the woof. Others read stola, "i.e. genus navigii," says Comm. Gg.
98 Psalm li. 7 (l. 8, in the Vulg.), "Asperges me hyssopo et mundabor."
100 nelle braccia aprissi, lit. "opened herself in the arms," a curious construction which Diez appears to have overlooked.
104 le quattro, the ladies who came on the left hand of the car, xxix. 130. They are the cardinal virtues; the tre of line IIII being those of xxix. 121; i.e. the theological. Cf. viii. 89.
each covered me with her arm. "Here are we nymphs, and in the sky we are stars; before that Beatrice descended to the world were we ordained to her for her handmaids. We will lead thee to her eyes, but in the joyous light that is within, thine will the three beyond, who look more deeply make keen." Thus singing they began, and next to the breast of the Grifon they led me with them, where Beatrice was standing turned to us. They said: "See that thou spare not thy gazes; we have placed thee before the emeralds, whence love once took his weapons for thee."

E ciascuna col braccio mi coperse.
Noi sem qui ninfe, e nel ciel semo stelle:
Pria che Beatrice discendesse al mondo,
Fummo ordinate a lei per sue ancelle.
Menrenti agli occhi suoi: ma nel giocondo
Lume ch'è dentro, aguzzeran li tuoi
Le tre di là, che miran più profondo.
Così cantando cominciari; e poi
Al petto del Grifon seco menarmi,
Ove Beatrice volta stava a noi.
Disser: Fa' che le viste non risparmi:
Posto t' avem dinanzi agli smeraldì,
Ond' Amor già ti trasse le sue armi.

106 stelle, those spoken of in i. 24.
108 Cf. De Mon. i. 4. ad fin.: "speculationi ancillantur."
109 menrenti = menere no tì. occhi. With this passage Philalethes bids us compare Conv. iii. 8, "perocchè in quelli due luoghi quasi tutte e tre le nature dell'anima hanno giurisdizione, cioè negli occhi e nella bocca," and 15, "qui si conviene sapere che gli occhi della sapienza sono le sue dimostrazioni . . . . e l' suo riso sono le sue persuasioni." It is by the eyes and smile of Beatrice that Dante is carried forward and instructed in Paradise. See xxvii. 54; also Par. i. 95, 101, ii. 52, iv. 139, xxx. 26, etc.
111 di là, "beyond, i.e. on the right-hand side of the car."
Thousand desires hotter than flame bound my eyes fast to the gleaming eyes, which were remaining fixed only on the Grifon. As the Sun in the mirror, not otherwise the twofold animal was beaming therewithin, now with one now with other deportment. Think, reader, if I marvelled when I saw the thing stay quiet in itself, and it was changing itself in its image. While, full of astonishment and happy, my soul was tasting of that food which, sating of itself, of itself makes thirst, showing themselves of the most lofty race in their demeanour, the other three came forward,

Mille disiri più che fiamma caldi
Strinsermi gli occhi agli occhi rilucenti,
Che pur sovra il Grifone stavan saldi.

Come in lo specchio il Sol, non altrimenti
La doppia fiera dentro vi raggiava,
Or con uni or con altri reggimenti.
Pensa, lettor, s’ io mi maravigliava,
Quando vedea la cosa in sè star queta,
E nell’ idolo suo si trasmutava.

Mentre che piena di stupore e lieta
L’ anima mia gustava di quel cibo,
Che saziando di sè, di sè asseta :
Sè dimostrando del più alto tribo
Negli atti, l’ altre tre si fero avanti, reggimenti are defined in Conv. iii. 7 as among the operations of the rational soul, and as being, together with speech, peculiar to man. Here, of course, the allusion is primarily to the Divine and human nature; but the use of the word carries us back to xvi. 128. It is only in Christ that the functions of King and Priest are rightly joined.

An allusion to Ecclus. xxiv. 20 (Vulg.) “Qui edunt me (sc.
sapientiam) adhuc esurient.”
dancing to their angelic measure. "Turn, Beatrice, turn thy holy eyes," was their song, "to thy faithful one, who to see thee has moved so many paces. Of thy favour do us the favour to unveil to him thy mouth, so that he may discern the second beauty which thou dost conceal."

O splendour of eternal living light, who is there that has in such wise grown pale beneath the shadow of Parnassus, or has drunk at its cistern, that he would not seem to have his mind encumbered, trying to render thee as thou appearedst, there where with its harmonies the heaven

Danzando al loro angelico caribo.
Volgi, Beatrice, volgi gli occhi santi,
Era la sua canzone, al tuo fedele,
Che per vederti ha mossi passi tanti.
Per grazia fa' noi grazia che disvele
A lui la bocca tua, sì che discerna
La seconda bellezza che tu cele.
O isplendor di viva luce eterna,
Chi' pallido si fece sotto l' ombra
Sl di Parnaso, o bevve in sua cisterna,
Che non paresse aver la mente ingombra,
Tentando a render te qual tu paresti, k O splendor di divina Gg.; O isplendori div. Cass.; -or div. 135;

   -ore div. 2.

bocca. See above note, line 109.
di viva has most authority, but the reading of Gg. is perhaps the best.

140-143 "Who has so devoted himself to the poetic art as to have acquired power to tell."
overshadows thee, when thou didst in the open air disclose thyself?

Là dove armonizzando il ciel t' adombra,
Quando nell' aere aperto ti solvesti?

"adombra. There is some uncertainty about the meaning of this word here. Witte understands it as "shadows around," like the background of a picture. I have followed Bianchi and Blanc. In any case it is hardly necessary to look, as some commentators have done, for a deep symbolical meaning in what appears to be a purely poetical outburst."
CANTO XXXII.

ARGUMENT.

The procession returns through the forest, Dante and Statius following. They reach a tree, to which the Grifon fastens the car. The tree is strangely transformed, and Dante falls asleep. When he awakes, Beatrice, Matilda, and the seven ladies alone remain. He sees a wondrous vision, setting forth the history of the Church and Empire, and showing what shall shortly come to pass.

So fixed and intent were my eyes to put off the longing of the ten years' thirst that all my other senses were extinguished; and they themselves had on this hand and on that a wall of unheedingness, so did the holy smile draw then to it with the ancient net; when perforce my gaze was turned

TANTO eran gli occhi miei fissi ed attenti
A disbramarsi la decenne sete
Che gli altri sensi m' eran tutti spenti:
Ed essi quinci e quindi avean parete
Di non caler, così lo santo riso
A sè traèli con l' antica rete:
Quando per forza mi fu volto il viso

5 caler. Some MSS. read calar, which has merits. (?) cader.)
to my left hand by those goddesses, for that I began to hear from them a “Too fixed.” And the disposition which exists with regard to sight in eyes but lately smitten by the sun caused me to be some while without power of seeing, but after that my sight reformed itself to the lesser object (I say the lesser with respect to the great object of sense, from which by force I removed myself) I saw that the glorious army had wheeled on its right flank, and was returning with the sun and with the seven flames in its face.

Ver la sinistra mia da quelle Dee,
Perch' io udia da loro un: Troppo fisso.
E la disposizion ch' a veder ee
Negli occhi, pur testè dal sol percossi,
Sanza la vista alquanto esser mi fee:
Ma poichè al poco il viso riformossi,
Io dico al poco, per rispetto al molto
Sensibile, onde a forza mi rimossi,
Vidi in sul braccio destro esser rivolto
Lo glorioso esercito, e tornarsi
Col sole e con le sette fiamme al volto.

8 ver la sinistra mia, i.e. as he is facing the car (xxxi. 113), the three on the right side of it (ib. 111).
10 Cf. xvii. 52.
26–24 Notice that the leading band (the prophets, etc.) must have turned back since xxx. 9, to their first position. Here they “counter-march by the right,” exactly as an army would do in the face of an enemy, keeping the shield-arm towards him. Dante must have seen the manœuvre often enough in his soldiering days. The car is evidently suggested by the carroccio then in use. (See Sismondi, Rép. It. chap. vi. and G. Villani vi. 75.)
18 As they are returning eastwards, and still have the Sun in front, it is clear that all the action since xxvii. 133 has occupied but a very short time.
As under the shields for retreat wheels a troop, and turns with the standard, before it is able wholly to face about, that soldiery of the heavenly kingdom which was leading all went past us before the front beam turned the car. Then the ladies returned to the wheels, and the Grifon moved the blessed burthen, yet in such wise that no feather of him shook. The fair dame who drew me to the passage and Statius and I were following the wheel that made its track with a smaller arc. So as we passed through the high wood, empty by fault of her who trusted to the serpent, an angelic strain measured our paces.

Come sotto li scudi, per salvarsi,
Volgesi schiera, e sè gira col segno,
Prima che possa tutta in sè mutarsi;
Quella milizia del celeste regno,
Che precedeva, tutta trapassonne,
Pria che piegasse il carro il primo legno.
Indi alle ruote si tornar le donne,
E il Grifon mosse il benedetto carco,
Sì che però nulla penna crollonne.
La bella donna che mi trasse al varco,
E Stazio ed io seguitavam la ruota,
Che fe’ l’ orbita sua con minore arco.
Sì passeggiando l’ alta selva vota,
Colpa di quella ch’ al serpente crese,
Temprava i passi un’ angelica nota.
Forse in tre voli tanto spazio prese

*a Si che poi Cass. 124; da poi 3; colonna Cass.
b atteso G.

34 primo legno, the pole.
35 I.e. they were to the “right rear” of the car.
34 prese, not quite equal to *avve, or *avrebbe preso. It is precisely the use of the Greek aorist. See Goodwin, Gr. M. and T. § 30. Cf. xxii. 11.
Perhaps in three flights an arrow let from the string takes such a space as we had removed, when Beatrice alighted. I heard all murmur “Adam;” then they circled a plant despoiled of flower and of leafage too on every branch. Its topmost boughs, which widen out the more as they are higher up, would be wondered at for height by the Indians in their forests. “Blessed art thou, Grifon, that thou tearest not with thy beak of this wood sweet to the taste, seeing that ill was the belly griped therefrom.” Thus

Disfrenata saetta, quanto eramo
Rimossi, quando Beatrice scese.
Io senti’ mormorare a tutti: Adamo:
Poi cerchiaro una pianta dispogliata
Di fiori e d’ altra fronda in ciascun ramo.
La coma sua, che tanto si dilata
Più, quanto più è su, fora dagl’ Indi
Ne’ boschi lor per altezza ammirata.
Beato sei, Grifon, che non discindi
Col becco d’esto legno dolce al gusto,
Posciachè mal si torse il ventre quindi.
Così d’ intorno all’ arbore robusto

---

\(^c\) Disferrata Cass. 2 ; differrata 14.
\(^d\) Di foglia Gg. 3, Ald. Land.; foglia 124 ; con suo ramo Cass. 124.

\(^{39}\) altra. So ii. 32, xiv. 44. See Diez iii. 76, and compare “οὐ γὰρ ἢν χόρτος οὐδὲ ἄλλο δένδρον οὐδέν,” Xen. An. i. 5, 5, and similar uses.

\(^{40}\) coma is the reading of most MSS. Ald. and Land. The later edd. have often chioma. Cima, however, is found ; and a comparison with xxxiii. 66, would suggest that it may be the right reading. Gg. reads coma,” i.e. cima,” Ottimo explains “vetta.” With the arrangement of the branches cf. xxii. 133.
round about the stalwart tree cried the others; and the animal of two natures: "So is preserved the seed of all that is righteous." And turning to the pole which he had pulled, he drew it to the foot of the widowed branch, and to it he left bound that which was of it. As our plants, when downward falls the great light mingled with that which beams behind the heavenly carp, grow turgid, and then each renews itself with its own colour before that the Sun yoke his coursers under another star, [so] showing a colour less than of roses and more than of violets, the plant

Gridaron gli altri: e l’ animal binato:
Si si conserva il seme d’ ogni giusto. 50
E volto al temo ch’ egli avea tirato,
Trasselo al piè della vedova fresca;
E quel di lei a lei lasciò legato.

Come le nostre piante, quando casca
Giù la gran luce mischiata con quella
Che raggia dietro alla celeste Lasca,
Turgide fansi, e poi si rinnovella
Di suo color ciascuna, pria che il Sole Giunga li suoi corsier sott’ altra stella;
Men che di rose, e più che di viole,

* Gridando Gg. Cass. 124; ben nato Gg. (m.)

54 * quel di lei. This is variously explained. Primarily it must, I think, allude to the old legend that the cross of Christ, which I take the pole to denote, was made of the wood of the tree of Life. (See Trench Sacred Latin Poetry, p. 181.) Buti has also, according to Philalethes, noticed the same legend.

54 * la celeste lasca = the sign of the Fish. The light behind it is the Ram, and the meaning is merely, when the Sun is in Aries: "when the yonge Sonne hath in the Ram his halfe cours yronne."
renewed itself which before had had its branches so desert. I understood it not, nor here is sung the hymn which that folk then sang, nor did I endure the strain throughout. If I could portray in what wise fell asleep the pitiless eyes at hearing the tale of Syrinx, the eyes to which too great watchfulness cost so dear, as a painter who paints with a model would I represent how I went to sleep; but whoso would do it let him be able well to represent slumber.

Colore aprendo, s' innovò la pianta,
Che prima avea le ramora si sole.

Io non lo intesi, nè qui non si canta.
L' inno che quella gente allor cantaro,
Nè la nota soffersi tutta quanta.
S' io potessi ritrar come assonnaro
Gli occhi spietati, udendo di Siringa,
Gli occhi a cui più vegghiar costò sì caro;
Come pintor che con esemplo pinga,
Disegnerai com' io m' addormentai:
Ma qual vuol sia che l' assonnar ben finga:

60 ramora; for this and similar forms, see Diez ii. 26.

61 The readings vary a good deal. Nè quaggìù seems to want MS. authority. Nè qui non seems the best. For the double negative, see Diez iii. 389, 390. Witte's e qui non makes the line a syllable short.

62 Ovid Met. i. 678-723.

63 "Let it be that he well represent." assonnar = lit. "to fall asleep." Philalethes remarks that Dante himself has succeeded in doing this better than any one, in xviii. 141.
Wherefore I pass on to when I awoke, and I say that a brightness tore for me the veil of my sleep, and a call: "Arise! what doest thou?"

As, led to behold of the flowerets of the apple which makes the angels greedy of its fruit and makes everlasting wedding in heaven, and overcome, Peter and John and James returned, at the word whereby greater slumbers were broken, and beheld their band diminished by Moses, even as by Elias, and the raiment of their master changed; so came I to myself, and saw that kindly one standing over me who was before conductress of my steps along the

Però trascorso a quando mi svegliai; 70
E dico, ch' un splendor mi squarcì il velo
Del sonno, ed un chiamar; Surgi, che vai?
Quale a veder de' fioretti del melo,
Che del suo pomo gli Angeli fa ghiotti,
E perpetue nozze fa nel Cielo,
Pietro e Giovanni e Iacopo condotti
E vinti, ritornaro alla parola,
Dalla qual furon maggior sonni rotti,
E videro scemata loro scuola,
Così di Moisè come d' Elia, 80
Ed al Maestro suo cangiata stola;
Tal torna' io: e vidi quella pia
Sovra me starsi, che conducitrice
Fu de' miei passi lungo il fiume pria:

72 The "apple" is Christ, with allusion to Canticles ii. 3; the "flowers" are the foretaste of his glory, as seen by the Apostles at the Transfiguration; the "fruit" is its full fruition in Heaven.
79 loro for suo. Diez iii. 55, 65. (He is rather meagre.) Corticelli, Ling. Tosc. p. 55, says that when more than one person is the subject of the sentence, loro is the better use.
stream; and all in doubt I said: "Where is Beatrice?"
And she: "Behold her underneath the new leaves, sitting on its root. Behold the company which surrounds her;
the others are going their way on high with the Grifon, with sweeter song and more profound." And if her speech was further poured forth I know not, because already I had in view her who had closed me to hearing aught else. She was sitting alone on the very ground, as guardian left there

E tutto in dubbio dissi: Ov'è Beatrice?
Ed ella: Vedi lei sotto la fronda
Nuova sedersi in su la sua radice.
Vedi la compagnia che la circonda:
Gli altri dopo il Grifon sen vanno suso,
Con più dolce canzone e più profonda.
E se fu più lo suo parlar diffuso,
Non so: perocchè già negli occhi m'era
Quella ch'ad altro intender m'avea chiuso.
Sola sedeasi in su la terra vera,

seconda Cass. 124.

90 In allusion to Rev. xiv. 3.
94 vera. The meaning of this word has been a good deal discussed, and various interpretations suggested, of which Vellutello's "perchè la Theologia è fondata sopra la vera e non fitta humilità" is no better nor worse than the average. The annotator of Gg. says
"ubi arbor scientiae boni." Witte compares Inf. ii. 23, and thinks it means that the Roman empire (denoted by the Tree) was the true seat of the Church. He renders by "wahrhaft," Philalethes by "echt."
All these seem to me to make too much of what is probably only an "epitheton ornans." At the same time there may be something of the same idea as in xiii. 95, and xvi. 96. Other readings are mera and nera.
of the wain which I saw the two-formed animal tie. In circle were making of themselves an enclosure to her the seven nymphs, with those lights in their hands which are secure from Aquilo and Auster. "Here thou shalt be a little time a woodman, and thou shalt be with me without end a citizen of that Rome whereof Christ is a Roman; wherefore, to the profit of the world which lives ill, keep now thine eyes on the car, and what thou seest, when thou art returned yonder, see that thou write." Thus Beatrice, and I who at the feet of her commands was all devoted, set my

Come guardia lasciata lì del plaustro,
Che legar vidi alla biforme fiera.
In cerchio le facevan di sè claustrò
Le sette Ninfe con que' lumi in mano,
Che son sicuri d' Aquilone e d' Austro.
Qui sarai tu poco tempo silvano,⁹⁶
E sarai meco sanza fine cive
Di quella Roma onde Cristo è Romano :
Però in pro del mondo che mal vive,
Al carro tieni or gli occhi, e quel che vedi,
Ritornato di là fa' che tu scrive.
Così Beatrice: ed io che tutto a' piedi
De suoi comandamenti era devoto,
La mente e gli occhi, ov' ella volle, diedi.

⁹⁶ vidi legar alla f. Cf. l. 37, and see note to viii. 106. Alla must not be regarded as = dalla.

⁹⁷ silvano. Is there not a suggestion of foresta, forestiere, connecting the thought with that of xiii. 96? Qui signifies "in this world," denoted by the earthly Paradise. "Beatitudinem hujus vitae, quae . . . per terrestrem paradisum figuratur," De Mon. iii. 15.

⁹⁸ Cf. for a variation of the expression xxvi. 129.

⁹⁹ Cf. xvi. 103.

⁰⁵ Copied from Rev. i. 11.
mind and my eyes where she would have. Never descended with such swift motion fire from a thick cloud when rain is falling from that boundary which is most remote, as I beheld the bird of Jove swoop downward through the tree, rending of the bark, much more the flowers and the new leaves; and he smote the car with all his force, whereat it reeled, as a ship in a tempest overcome by the

Non scese mai con si veloce moto
Fuoco di spessa nube, quando piöve
Da quel confine che più è remoto;
Com’ io vidi calar l’ uccel di Giove
Per l’ arbor giù, rompendo della scorza,
Non che de’ fiori e delle foglie nuove,
E ferio il carro di tutta sua forza;
Ond’ ei piegò, come nave in fortuna,

1 più va Gg. Cass. 3 W.; più ha 124.

109-111 Lightning is generated in those clouds which approach nearest to the sphere of fire (the lower limit of which is at the level of the entrance to Purgatory; cf. xxi. 46 sqq.). πυκνοτέρας τής συστάσεως τῶν νεφών γενομένης πρὸς τὸ ἔχατον πέρας.—Aristotle Meteor. ii. 9. Beyond this clouds do not go; it is therefore their remotest boundary. Bianchi takes piöve in the sense in which curiously enough it is most often used by Dante, of "falls," and understands it of the lightning. But it seems best, with the great majority of interpreters, to take it in its literal sense. On the other hand I have followed him in reading, with most of the early edd., più è, instead of the più va which many MSS. give. The v may easily have slipped in from piöve in the line before, and then piuue would have got altered to piuua. The doubt between è and va in line 46 may also have affected the readings here; but va has there a meaning, while it is hard to see how a fixed boundary can be said to "go more remote."

116 fortuna. Littre gives several examples of the use of fortune in this sense. It appears to have been almost a technical term. Thus Froissart: "Il eut une fortune de vent sur mer." So in the sonnet, "Guido, vorrei," L. 5.
waves, now to starboard now to larboard. Next I saw come into the hollow of the triumphal chariot a vixen, which from all good food appeared fasting; but reproaching her with loathly sins, my lady turned her to such flight as the fleshless bones allowed. Next, from thence, whence it had before come, I saw the eagle come down into the ark of the car, and leave it feathered from itself. And as comes from a heart that is embittered, such a voice issued from Heaven and spoke thus: "O my ship, how ill art thou

Vinta dall’ onda or da poggia or da orza.
Poscia vidi avventarsi nella cuna
Del trionfal veicolo una volpe,
Che d’ ogni pasto buon parea digiuna.

Ma riprendendo lei di laide colpe,
La donna mia la volse in tanta futa;
Quanto sofferson l’ ossa senza polpe.

Poscia per indi ond’ era prìa venuta,
L’ aquila vidi scender giù nell’ arca
Del carro, e lasciar lei di sè pennuta."

E qual’ esce di cuor che si rammarcha,
Tal voce usci del Cielo, e cotal disse:

\[ m \text{ per la Gg.}; \text{ ver la 3.} \]
\[ n \text{ così pen Cass.} \]

17 orza and poggia appear to be rather the sheets, than, as most commentators say, the braces.

225 voce; of St. Peter. The annotator of Gg. tells a story, which Witte also mentions as a legend current in early ages, that at the time of Constantine’s donation a voice had been heard to cry from heaven: “Hodie diffusum est venenum in ecclesia Dei;” and cf. Inf. xix. 115. It must be remembered that no doubt existed in Dante’s time as to the genuineness of the donation; and it was not until the next century that the fiction was exposed by Valla. See Gibbon, chap. xlix.
freighted!" Then it appeared to me that the earth opened herself between the two wheels, and I saw issue therefrom a dragon, who fixed his tail up through the car; and, like a wasp which draws back its sting, drawing to himself the malignant tail, he drew part of the floor, and went his way rambling about. That which remained, like ground alive with herbage, covered itself again with the feathers, offered haply with sound and benign intention, and was covered again therewith, both one and the other wheel and the pole, in so long time that the open mouth longer holds

O navicella mia, com' mal se' carca!^0
Poi parve a me che la terra s' aprisse
Tr' ambo le rote, e vidi uscirne un drago,^p
Che per lo carro su la coda fisse:
E come vespa che ritragge l' ago,
A sè traendo la coda maligna,
Trasse del fondo, e gissen vago vago.
Quel che rimase, come di gramigna
Vivace terra, della piuma, offerta
Forse con intenzion sana e benigna,^q
Si ricoperse e funne ricoperta
E l' una e l' altra ruota e il temo in tanto,
Che più tiene un sospir la bocca aperta.

^0 co mal Gg. Cass. ^p indi Gg. ^q casta e b. Ald. Bi.

^29 com' for come is not very satisfactory, though there are instances of it; none, however, before a word beginning with m. If we read co, may it not stand for eco, as in coloro, etc. ?
^35 For di in a "partitive" sense, cf. ll. 113, 114, and see Diez iii. 149. The repetition of vago shows that it must here be in the less usual meaning of "vagus," not as some have thought "greedy."
^38 Cf. Par. xx. 56.
a sigh. Transformed thus the holy edifice put forth heads through its parts, three over the pole and one in every corner. The first were horned like an ox, but the four had a single horn on the forehead; a like prodigy was never yet seen. Secure as a fortress on a lofty mountain, meseemed there sat thereon a dishevelled harlot, with brows quick to move around. And, as if in order that she should not be taken from him, I saw beside her upright a giant,

Trasformato così il dificio santo
Mise fuor teste per le parti sue,
Tre sovra il temo, ed una in ciascun canto.
Le prime eran cornute come bue,
Ma le quattro un sol corno avean per fronte:
Simile mostro visto ancor non fue.⁴³
Sicura, quasi rocca in alto monte,
Seder sovr' esso una puttana sciolta
M' apparve con le ciglia intorno pronte. ⁴⁰
E come perché non li fosse tolta,
Vidi di costa a lei dritto un gigante, ancor visto Gg. 3; v.anco Cass.; s. in nostra vista 14; in vista mai Ald.; visto mai Bi.

¹⁴³ For the seven heads and ten horns, cf. Rev. xiii. 1, and xvii. 9, 12. The harlot is taken from xvii. 3. There is a similar allusion, Inf. xix. 106.

¹⁴⁷ It is not easy to see how Dante, when obviously taking the idea of these seven heads from the beast seen by St. John, can have said that “the like had never been seen.” I have followed the usually accepted reading, Simile mostro visto (or in vista) mai (or ancor) non fue, but it is very probable that 1, 2, and 4 are right in reading simile in nostra vista. Or is mai corrupt? Simile m. in vista mia would give a good sense.
and they kissed together a certain while; but because she turned her lustful and roving eye to me, that fierce paramour scourged her from the head even to the soles of her feet.
Then, full of jealousy and cruel with rage, he cast loose the monster, and drew it through the wood so far that only with it he shielded from me the harlot and the new-made beast.

E baciavansi insieme alcuna volta.
Ma perché l' occhio cupido e vagante
A me rivolse, quel feroce drudo
La flagellò dal capo insin le piante.
Poi di sospetto pieno e d' ira crudo
Disciolse il mostro, e trassel per la selva
Tanto che sol di lei mi fece scudo
Alla puttana ed alla nuova belva.

153 alcuna volta; not, I think, as it is usually rendered "several times," but as in xxiv. 65. So lunga fiata, in xxx. 27, and elsewhere.
159 I.e. so far that the wood alone was enough to hide them from me.
CANTO XXXIII.

ARGUMENT.

They proceed a little distance, and Beatrice explains that the vision will shortly be fulfilled, and prophesies of one who will restore the Empire. It is midday, and Matilda leads Dante and Statius to drink of the water of Eunoë, which makes them fit to ascend to Heaven.

Deus, venerunt gentes, now three, now four in alternation, a sweet psalmody, the ladies began, weeping; and Beatrice, sighing and pitiful, listened to them in such guise that little more did Mary change herself at the cross. But after that the other maidens gave place to her to speak, risen upright

Deus, venerunt gentes, alternando,
Or tre or quattro, dolce salmodia
Le donne incominciaron lagrimando.
E Beatrice sospirosa e pia
Quelle ascoltava si fatta, che poco
Più alla croce si cambiò Maria.
Ma poiché l' altre vergini dier loco
A lei di dir, levata dritta in piè

² Deus venerunt. Psalm lxxxix. 1.
on her feet she made answer, being in hue like to fire:
"Modicum et non videbitis me, et iterum, my beloved sisters, modicum et vos videbitis me." Then she put them all seven in front of her, and after her, only making a sign, she caused to go me and the Dame and the Sage who remained. Thus she moved away, and I do not think that her tenth step had been placed on the ground when with her eyes she smote my eyes, and with calm aspect: "Come more quickly," she said to me, "so much that if I speak with thee thou mayest be well placed to listen to me." So soon as I was, as was my duty, with her, she said to me: "Brother, why dost thou not attempt to inquire, now that thou art coming with

Rispose, colorata come fuoco,

Modicum, et non videbitis me:

Et iterum, sorelle mie dilette,

Modicum, et vos videbitis me.

Poi le si mise innanzi tutte e sette:

E dopo sè, solo accennando mosse

Me e la donna e il Savio che ristette.

Così sen giva, e non credo che fosse

Lo decimo suo passo in terra posto,

Quando con gli occhi gli occhi mi percosse,

E con tranquillo aspetto: Vien più tosto,

Mi disse, tanto che s' io parlo teco,

Ad ascoltarmi tu sie ben disposto.

Sì com' io fui, com' io doveva, seco,

Dissemi: Frate, perché non t' attenti
A dimandar omai venendo meco?

9 come fuoco, i.e. with the colour of love.
10 John xvi. 16.
15 il savio. Statius, who has been with them all the time.
me?” As befalls those who being over-reverent before their betters are in act to speak, that they bring not the voice alive to the teeth, it befell me that I began without perfect sound: “My lady, my care you know, and that which for it is good.” And she to me: “From fear and from shame I will that thou henceforward disenfold thyself, so that thou speak no more as one who dreams. Thou knowest that the vessel which the serpent broke was and is not, but let him who has the blame thereof believe that God’s vengeance

Come a color che troppo reverenti
Dinanzi a suo maggior parlando sono,
Che non traggon la voce viva a' denti,
Avvenne a me, che senza intero suono
Incominciai: Madonna, mia bisogna
Voi conoscete e ciò ch'ad essa è buono.

Ed ella a me: Da tema e da vergogna
Voglio che tu omai ti disviluppe,
Sì che non parli più com’ uom che sognà.
Sappi che il vaso, che il serpente ruppe,
Fu, e non è: ma chi n' ha colpa creda
Che vendetta di Dio non teme suppe.
Non sarà tutto tempo sanza reda *

* Non sarà d'ogni t. Gg.

35 Cf. xxxi. 7.
35 Fu e non è, from Rev. xvii. 8.
36 non teme suppe. Alluding to the superstition, current in Florence in the Middle Ages, that if a murderer could contrive within eight days after the crime to eat a piece of bread dipped in wine (or any food, say some), on his victim’s grave, he would escape the relations’ vengeance. See Fauriel, Dante, vol. i. p. 535. The idea here is probably like Horace’s “Venena fas nefasque non valent convertere.”
37 sanza reda. Because in Dante’s view there had been no real fears not sops. For all time without heir the eagle will not be who left his feathers on the car, whereby it became a monster and afterward a prey; for I see certainly, and therefore I tell it, stars secure from all assault and all hindrance, already near to give us a time, in the which a five hundred, ten, and five, sent by God shall slay the runagate, together with that giant who sins with her. And it may be that my tale, dark like Themis and Sphinx, persuades thee

L' aquila che lasciò le penne al carro:
Per ch'è divenne mostro e poscia preda.
Ch' io veggio certamente, e però il narro,
A darne tempo già stelle propinque
Sicure d' ogni intoppo e d' ogni sbarro:
Nel quale un cinquecento diece e cinque
Messo di Dio anciderà la fuià,
Con quel gigante che con lei delinque.
E forse che la mia narrazion buia, Qual Temi e Sfinge, men ti persuade;

b ogni stroppo Gg.

40 spinge Gg. Cass. 1234; e me ti Gg.; me ti Cass. 124.

c emperor since the death of Frederick II. Cf. Conv. iv. 3, where Frederick is called "ultimo imperatore de' Romani, per rispetto a tempo presente."

44 fuià. "sc. meretricem," says the annotator of Gg.; but this is probably an explanation, not a translation. "Räuberin," Witte, with whom Blanc agrees. "Vettel," Philalethes. But see Glossary.

47 Qual Temi e Sfinge. The allusion is to Ovid Met. vii. 758 sqq. "Carmina Laiaedes non intellecta priorum solverat ingenis," etc., where, until emended into this form by Heinsius, former edd. following a blunder of the MSS., read "Naiades—solvunt." The attempts to justify the accuracy of the older reading by reference to Pausanias, Lactantius, and others, are obviously futile, if only because the pluperf. solverat is nearly as much needed as the name of Ædipus.
less, because after their fashion it chokes the understanding; but soon the facts will be the Naiades, who will solve this hard riddle, without loss of flocks or of corn. Do thou mark, and in such wise as from me are borne these words, so teach them to those who live with the life which is a hastening unto death; and bear in mind, when thou writest them, not to conceal what thou hast seen the plant, which has now been twice plundered here. Whosoever robs that or strips it offends God with blasphemy of act, for to His own use only He created it holy. For biting that, in pain and in desire five thousand years and more the first soul longed for Him who in His own self

Perch' a lor modo lo intelletto attuia:
Ma tosto fien li fatti le Naiade,
Che solveranno questo enigma forte,
Sanza danno di pecore e di biade.
Tu nota; e sì come da me son porte
Queste parole, sì le insegna a' vivi
Del viver ch' è un correre alla morte;
Ed aggi a mente, quando tu le scrivi,
Di non celar qual hai vista la pianta,
Ch' è or due volte dirubata quivi.
Qualunque ruba quella o quella schianta,
Con bestemmia di fatto offende Dio,
Che solo all' uso suo la creò santa.
Per morder quella, in pena e in disio
Cinquemil' anni e più, l' anima prima
Bramò colui che il morso in sè punìo.

\[\text{\textit{fiar le fate Cass.}; fien le fate e 5.}\]

57 First by Adam, secondly by the separation from it of the car
"which was of it" (xxxii. 51).
avenged the bite. Thy intellect sleeps if thou judge not that for a special reason it is so high, and so spread at the top. And if thy vain thoughts had not been as water of Elsa around the mind, and their pleasure as Pyramus to the mulberry tree, through so great circumstances only hadst thou recognised with thy moral sense the justice of God in the interdict upon the tree. But because I see thee in thy understanding made of stone, and of stony tint, so that the light of my word dazzles thee, I will moreover—and if not written, at least depicted—that thou bear it away within

Dorme lo ingegno tuo, se non istima
Per singular cagione essere eccelsa
Lei tanto, e si travolta nella cima.ε
E se stati non fossero acqua d’ Elsa
Li pensier vani intorno alla tua mente,
E il piacer loro un Piramo alla gelsa;
Per tante circostanze solamente
La giustizia di Dio’nello interdetto
Conosceresti all’ alber moralmente.
Ma perch’ io veggio te nello intelletto
Fatto di pietra e di petrato tinto,f ε tanto si tr. essere in c. Gg.

f in petrato t. Gg. Cass. Bi; impetrato 124; ed impetrato, t. 3 W.

67 sqq: The river Elsa in Tuscany was reputed to have a petrifying power. The mulberry was white until the blood of Pyramus stained it (xxvii. 39). The meaning therefore is: “If your mind had not been hardened and its purity lost, by reason of worldly cares and pleasures, you would have understood, from what has happened to the tree, the justice of God in forbidding any hand to be laid on it.” For the meaning, in connection with the whole allegory, see Appendix B.

74 Witte’s impetrato, tinto, seems rather clumsy. I venture to adopt a variant given by him. Cf. xiii. 9, for the colour of stone.
thee for that wherefore the staff circled with palm is taken.”
And I: “As wax by a seal, which changes not the figure impressed, so is my brain now stamped by them. But why so far above my view flies your desired speech, that more it loses it the more it strives?” “That thou mayest know,” said she, “that school which thou hast followed, and mayest see how its doctrine is able to follow my speech, and mayest see that your way is from God’s way so far apart as is distant

Si che t’ abbaglia il lume del mio detto;
Voglio anche, e se non scritto, almen dipinto
Che il te ne porti dentro a te per quello,
Che si reca il bordon di palma cinto.
Ed io: Sì come cera da suggello,
Che la figura impressa non trasmuta,
Segnato è or da voi lo mio cervello.
Ma perchè tanto sovra mia veduta
Vostra parola disiata vola,
Che più la perde quanto più s’ aiuta?
Perchè conosci, disse, quella scuola,
Ch’ hai seguitata, e veggi sua dottrina
Come può seguitar la mia parola;
E veggi vostra via dalla divina
Distar cotalto, quanto si discorda

\[76\] I.e. if not put in words at least figured in your mind.
\[77, 78\] I.e. in memory of the places which you have visited. For the different kinds of pilgrims, see V. N. § xii.
\[79\] Dante is fond of this metaphor of the seal and the wax. Cf. x. 45, xviii. 39.
\[84\] s’aiuta. Cf. xii. 130.
\[85\] come, i.e. how little.
\[86, 87\] Isaiah lv. 8, 9.
from earth the heaven, which speeds the highest.” Wherefore I answered her: “It comes not to my mind that I estranged myself ever from you, nor have I conscience thereof to prick me.” “And if thou canst not remember thee thereof,” smiling she answered, “now bethink thee how thou hast this day drunk of Lethe; and if from the smoke fire is argued, this forgetfulness clearly concludes a fault in thy will intent elsewhere. But truly henceforth my words will be plain so far as shall behove to uncover them to thy untrained sight.”

And more flashing and with slower pace the Sun was

Da terra il ciel che più alto festina.
Ond’ io risposi lei: Non mi ricorda
Ch’ io straniassi me giammai da voi,
Nè honne coscienza che rimorda.

E se tu ricordar non te ne puoi,
Sorridendo, rispose, or ti rammenta
Come bevesti di Letè ancoi:

E se dal fumo fuoco s’ argomenta,
Cotesta oblivion chiaro conclude
Colpa nella tua voglia altrove attenta.

Veramente oramai saranno nude
Le mie parole, quanto converrassi
Quelle scovrire alla tua vista rude.

E più corrusco, e con più lenti passi

h straviassi Cg. (alt. to stran.); Cass.

96 sqq. Because Lethe only takes away the memory of faults.

103 più lenti. The sun seems to travel slower when it is high, because the shadows change less in a given time than they do when it is near the horizon.
holding the meridian circle, which sets itself here and there according as you observe it, when fixed themselves (as fixes himself he who goes before a troop by way of escort, if he finds aught new in his track) the seven dames, at the end of a pale shadow, such as under green leaves and black boughs the Alps bear above their cool brooks. In front of them meseemed I saw Euphrates and Tigris issue from one fount, and, like friends, separate slowly. "O light, O glory of the race of men, what water is this which here displays itself from one beginning and parts itself from itself?" For such prayer it was said to me: "Pray Matilda that she tell thee."

Teneva il sole il cerchio di merigge,
Che qua e là, come gli aspetti, fassi,
Quando s' affisser, sì come s' affigge
Chi va dinanzi a schiera per iscorta,
Se truova novitate in sue vestigge,
Le sette donne al fin d' un' ombra smorta,
Qual sotto foglie verdi e rami nigrì,
Sovra suoi freddi rivi l' Alpe porta.

Dinanzi ad esse Eufrates e Tigri
Veder mi parve uscir d' una fontana,
E quasi amici dispartirsi pigri.
O luce, O gloria della gente umana,1
Che acqua è questa che qui si dispiega
Da un principio, e sì da sì lontana?
Per cotal prego detto mi fu: Prega
Matelda, che il ti dica: e qui rispose,

1 mente usw. Gg.

105 I.e. varies with the longitude. aspetti, like "leve," xxv. 39.
119 Matilda's name is here mentioned for the first time.
And here replied, as he does who sets him free from blame, the fair lady: “This and other things have been told him by me; and I am sure that the water of Lethe has not hidden them from him.” And Beatrice: “Perchance a greater care, which oftentimes takes away memory, has made his mind dim in the eyes. But behold Eunoë which there has its source; lead thou him to it, and as thou art wont quicken again his virtue partly dead.” As a noble soul that makes not excuse, but makes its will of the will of another, so soon as by a sign it is outwardly disclosed; in such wise, after I had been taken by her, the fair lady moved, and to Statius said in manner as a lady: “Come with him.”

If I had, reader, longer space to write, I should sing,

Come fa chi da colpa si dislega,
La bella donna: Questo ed altre cose
Dette li son per me: e son sicura
Che l’ acqua di Letè non gliel nascose.
E Beatrice: Forse maggior cura,
Che spesse volte la memoria priva,
Fatto ha la mente sua negli occhi oscura.
Ma vedi Eunoë che là deriva:
Menalo ad esso, e come tu se’ usa,
La tramortita sua virtù ravviva.
Com’ anima gentil ch’è non fa scusa,
Ma fa sua voglia della voglia altrui,
Tosto com’ è per segno fuor dischiusa:
Così poi che da essa preso fui,
La bella donna mossesi, ed a Stazio
Donnecamente disse: Vien con lui.
S’ io avessi, lettor, più lungo spazio

k più largo Gg.
at all events in part, the sweet draught which never would have sated me; but, for that all the sheets put in frame for this second Canticle are full, the bridle of my art lets me go no further. I turned back from the most holy wave reflect in such wise as new plants renewed with new foliage, pure and disposed to mount up to the stars.

Da scrivere, io pur cantere' in parte
Lo dolce ber che mai non m' avria sazio.
Ma perch'è piene son tutte le carte
Ordite a questa cantica seconda,
Non mi lascia piu ir-lo fren dell' arte.
Io ritornai dalla santissim' onda
Rifatto si, come piante novelle
Rinnovellate di novella fronda,
Puro e disposto a salire alle stelle.

138 Cf. xxxi. 139.
145 As has often been remarked, each Cantica ends with the word stelle.
APPENDIX A.

(NOTE TO CANTO XXVII.)

THE DREAMS OF CANTOS IX. XIX. AND XXVII.

Since of the three divisions of the future world it is Purgatory alone in which time can be said to have any place, it is natural that there alone we should find the ordinary division of time into days and nights still existing. For the shades, who being free from the physical burden of the flesh, have no need of physical repose, the change from day to night merely causes a change in the subjects of their penitential meditation; but the human traveller, with Adam's part still in him, needs rest no less than on earth. Accordingly, as has been seen, a part of each night is spent by Dante in sleep; and each night his sleep is visited by a dream. From their position in the poem, marking as it were the passage from the events of one day to those of the next, it can hardly be doubted that they are intended as a kind of prelude to what is about to follow. In the case of the last, indeed, he not only tells us as much (xxvii. 93), but makes it clear by the occupation of Matilda in the next Canto, exactly reproducing that of Leah in the dream. But with regard to the two former dreams, that of the Eagle and that of the Siren, this prefatory character is less obvious on the surface, and accordingly seems to have escaped most or all of those who have commented on them. Philalethes, for example, says "In der ersten Nacht am Thore des Purgatoriums, erscheint ihm Lucia (this is hardly correct, for she does not appear to Dante) die gratia praeviens oder operans, in der zweiten Nacht in der Mitte der büssenden Kreise sieht er den kampf des Menschen mit der Sinnlichkeit und seine Unterstützung durch die mitwirkende Gnade (gratia cooperans), und hier im Eingange des irdischen Paradieses hat er einen dritten Traum, dessen Bedeutung sich als auf den Zustand der Vollendung [sc. der Rechtfertigung] deutend zeigen wird." It will be seen that in this brief summary he follows the older commentators, such as Landino, who talk much of preventem, illuminant, and co-operant Grace. I should be far from saying that their interpretations are incorrect; but, as we are told* by Dante himself that the poem is "polysemous," we are surely at liberty to find another, and as it would seem, more significant interpretation.

In considering the three dreams, and Dante's mode of narrating them, one point of resemblance will be at once observed. Each takes place immediately before the dawn: "cum somnia vera;" "presso al mattin di ver si sogna;" and in each the hour is indicated by the introduction, beginning in every case with the words "Nell' ora" (which, with one exception, occur nowhere else in D.C.), and having reference to some natural phenomenon. It is the hour "when the swallow begins her song," "when the earth is chilliest," "when Venus first beamed on the mount." This makes it pretty clear that Dante intended the dream in each case to be associated with the experiences of the day at the opening of which it is placed; and a little closer consideration will perhaps throw light on the nature of the association. The line with which Leah ends seems to contain the key to the whole: "Lei lo veder, e me l'ovvrae appaga." The division of ἐνέργεια into πρακτικαί and θεωρητικαί, active and contemplative, is expounded by Aristotle, Eth. Nic. i. 5, and x. 7, 8. The latter passage Dante himself discusses in Conv. ii. 5, where he decides that "questa (the contemplative) vita è più divina." Here, as elsewhere, he is the obedient disciple of "the master of all human reason," "the master of those who know." Again, in Conv. iv. 22, he says: "L' uso del nostro animo è doppio, cioè pratico e speculativo. Quello del pratico si è operare per noi vertuosamenti, cioè onestamente, con prudenza, con temperanza, con fortezza, e con giustizia; quello dello speculativo si è non operare per noi, ma considerare l' opere di Dio e della natura." See also De Mon. iii. 15: "Duas fines Providentia illa narrabilis homini proposuit intendendos, beatitudinem scilicet hujus vitae, quae in operatione propriae virtutis consistit et per terrastrem paradisum figuratur, et beatitudinem vitae aeternae, quae consistit in fruizione divini aspectus." It follows then that every life (excepting the mere brute life of sensual enjoyment, the ἀπολαυστικὸς βίος;† which could in no case

* Epistle to Can Grande. So Foscolo remarks "Chi saprà mai quali e quanti l' Autore intendevasi di velare in ogni parola, e con quanta diversità di maniere ei spiegharli?"

† "Chi usa pur la vita sensitiva, non vive uomo ma vive bestia," Conv. ii. 8, and bestialità, θηριότης, in common with the other disposition, malsizia, which is punished within the city of Dis (Inf. xi.), does not admit of any purgation.
be represented in Purgatory), falling under one or other of these two divisions, sins may be classified according as they attach themselves more to the one or the other side of man's nature. This classification, though nowhere explicitly stated, seems to be plainly enough implied in the order wherein Dante arranges sinners in Purgatory. Thus, in the three lower circles are punished Pride, Envy, Anger, sins of contemplation—the two first of which, it may be remarked, have no place in Hell, because until they result in action (when they become schism, malice, and treachery, just as anger becomes violence, and are placed in the lowest Hell), they injure only the man himself, and not the fabric of society. Anger, indeed, like Sloth, may so destroy a man's moral nature as to render it unfit for purification; and so the Angry and Slothful lie together in Hell, forming there, as the Slothful by themselves in Purgatory, the division between the two chief classes of sins. That the Slothful are put by themselves in Purgatory is probably due to considerations of symmetry, and also because the sin of Sloth may be regarded as affecting both the Active and the Contemplative life, and checking the due development of one as much as of the other.

Passing above this intermediate zone, we find those who have sinned by Avarice, Gluttony, and Lasciviousness. Now these three sins do not exist save in Action: they postulate a corporeal existence. A purely abstract intelligence may be conceived as obnoxious to the attacks of Pride, Envy, and Anger, but not to the lusts of the flesh. We thus have, in addition to the division of sins given in Canto xvii., a further classification into sins of the contemplative and sins of the active life, with Sloth, or Accidita, assailing both, but more apparent in its effects on the latter, and leading more directly to those faults which especially belong to it.

We are now in a position to examine somewhat more closely the circumstances of each dream. In the first place, it is to be noted that the introduction, by which, as has been said, the hour is fixed, gives in each case the keynote to what follows. Thus, in the first night it is the swallow, with her memory of ancient woes, meditating upon the sorrows which she endured in human form. Moreover, it is the hour when the mind of man is "quasi divina" in its visions, the very same term being used which Dante applies to the contemplative life in the passage already quoted from the Convito. The poet is then seized by an Eagle, the emblem from the earliest Christian times of the soul which most aspires to meditate on divine things, and as such adopted for the special "cognisance" of St. John the Divine; he is borne up to the fire, or Empyrean heaven, "luogo," as he says, "di quella somma Deità che sè sola compiutamente vede," and when he wakes, his face is turned out to seaward, in the attitude which most suggests contemplation.

The second vision is of a different character, in that it deals rather with the fault to be avoided than the grace to be sought. The hour is that of the greatest cold, when all activity is at its weakest; and the allusions to the groping geomants and the dull planet Saturn appear to be intended to heighten the effect of the suggestion. The ordinary interpretation of this vision is different from that here indicated. The Siren has been generally taken to denote the false pleasure arising from the joys of this world, and leading to the sins which are punished in the three higher circles; and this is to some extent borne out by Virgil's words: "Che sola sovra noi omai si piagne,"* when taken in conjunction with the similar expression in xvii. 136, 137; but here again one interpretation does not exhaust the whole of the allegory. For let us consider the description of the figure which Dante sees. She is "balba, con gli occhi guerci, e sovra i piè distorta." Are not these the very symptoms of Sloth, which arrests the development of the active life? As he dwells on her, she becomes more and more attractive; and after she has been put to flight by the "donna† santa e presta" (note this epithet—it is a lady holy and alert who defeats the Siren), the recollection of her draws him back and makes him slow to mount upwards, so that Virgil has to enjoin upon him to use the action of a man who is arousing himself from sloth. Nor indeed does this explanation of the vision conflict with other evidence. The Siren says that it was she who drew Ulysses from his road. Now we do not find that the temptation which the Sirens held out to Ulysses was that of sensual pleasures; that is rather the part of Circe and the Lotos-eaters. The Sirens "know all the toils which Argives and Trojans had in broad Troy;" it is by the inducement of a slothful rest that they seek to draw men from their duty, and the enjoyment which they offer is intellectual rather than sensual; in any case it is inactive. Thus we seem irresistibly drawn to the conclusion that Dante's Siren, though, since idleness is at

* Also by xxxi. 45.
† This lady is clearly the "Donna gentil" of Inf. ii. 94. It will be observed that there she is connected with Lucia, whom she sends to Beatrice in order to move her to the aid of Dante; and here she performs a similar office to that discharged by Lucia in the first vision, namely, that of bringing it to an end, and arousing the sleeper. Comparing Inf. ii. 102, with Par. xxxii. 8, and looking to the juxtaposition of Maria with Lucia in Conv. iii. 5, we can hardly doubt that she is the Virgin Mary. (Since writing this, I find that Ozanam has come to the same conclusion).
once the cause and the effect of fleshly sins, she may not unfitly denote
"the love which abandons itself too much to them" is primarily "improba Siren desidia." It is to be observed also that just as, on awaking from the first dream, Dante finds himself as we have seen in an attitude fitted for contemplation, so in this case he notices on coming to himself that "we were going with the new Sun at our backs;"
the position which a man who wishes to see the work that lies before him would naturally assume.

Lastly as to the third dream, in Canto xxvii. All commentators seem agreed in considering that Rachel and Leah are understood by Dante, following all* the theologians of the Middle Age, as holding symbolically in the Old Testament the same position as Martha and Mary in the New. What that is he sets forth plainly in Conv. iv. 17.
In the world of history the typical representatives of the active and contemplative life are respectively Matilda and Beatrice. It is therefore right and fitting that after he has been awakened, not, as in the other dreams, by any special intervention, but merely by the splendour of the dawn, and after Virgil has resigned his charge at the entrance of the Earthly Paradise, giving him full power physical and spiritual, as implied by the crown and mitre, over himself, Dante should be met by Matilda, employed in the same manner as the Leah of his dream, and be led by her to the spot where Beatrice, descended from her place beside Rachel (Inf. ii. 102), comes to receive him.

It should be observed finally that Matilda, as representing here the glorified active life, finds her highest pleasure in "giving praise for the operations of God's hands;" that is, the ultimate perfection of one life is practically the same as that of the other—Leah decks herself, but takes "pleasure at her mirror" no less than Rachel. Herein, indeed, lies the key to most of Dante's moral and theological system, and even, as will be understood by a reference to the passage already indicated of the De Monarchiâ, to much of his political doctrine also; and I have therefore entered somewhat at length into what may seem to some, as they did to Sismondi, among the less interesting portions of the Cantica.
Possibly further consideration may lead to the belief that his judgement was formed hastily.

* Thus Hugh of St. Victor (quoted by Trench, Sacred Latin Poetry) has "Lia quae interpretatur laboriosa, signiflcat vitam activam . . .
Rachel, quae interpretatur visum principium, designat vitam contemplativam." Adam of St. Victor, "Lippam Lian latent multa quibus videns Rachel fulia Pari nubit foedere." And Bernard of Cluny, "Tunc Jacob Israel, et Lia tunc Rachel efficietur."
APPENDIX B.

ON THE ALLEGORY OF CANTOS XXIX.–XXXIII.

It seems, for several reasons, more convenient to relegate such exposition as must be given of these quasi-apocalyptic Cantos to a separate note, than to explain it step by step, by means of a running commentary. In the first place, such a course would rather overcrowd the pages with notes; and further, to those who read the poem merely for its poetry, this long historical disquisition—for it is indeed little else, in spite of an occasional outburst in Dante's grandest style—may seem a little wearisome, and by no means to be emphasized by frequent notes. Lastly, the general drift of the whole, in spite of the obscurity of details, is so clear and so connected, that the student will probably be best served by an attempt to elucidate it as a whole. So much of Dante's political doctrine is contained in it that this attempt is worth making. As will be seen, a great part of it contains a statement of the same theories which he expounded in a more strictly scientific form in the De Monarchia; and, of any interest which that treatise possesses, these Cantos may be fairly held to claim a share.

Perhaps it will be convenient to begin with a few words as to the personages. Of course it will be understood that Dante, Beatrice, and Virgil are primarily themselves; the "ten years' thirst," which is quenched in the light of the eyes "whence Love once drew his armoury," is no mere figure of the state of a man who has left the study of theology, or has been desirous to understand the mystic sense of Holy Scripture, as certain of the old expounders deem. On the other hand, it is not merely the woman Beatrice Portinari, to whom, before her birth, the Virtues themselves were appointed for handmaidens, or who addresses the ladies personifying these virtues in the very words used by Christ to his disciples. Thus there is a sense in which Beatrice and Virgil and Dante himself must be regarded as abstractions personified no less than those ladies, or the seven candlesticks, or the tree, or the mystic car. We may understand the two first as denoting the highest perfection which man can in the contemplative life attain—Virgil, by the light of nature, Beatrice as informed by revelation. Dante himself is the type of the soul of man in its search after this perfection; Matilda is the active life, which works with temperance, prudence, fortitude, and justice (Conv. iv. 22), but, in order to attain its highest bliss, needs to be blended with the contemplative, as indicated by the allusion to "the Psalm Delectasti." By this a man is guided through the world, figured, as we are told in the De Monarchia, by the earthly paradise, and led on to the point where he becomes worthy to enjoy the beatific contemplation of the Deity.

We may now follow the allegory step by step, from the point (xxix. 16) where Dante, warned by Matilda, turns his attention to what is coming. Seven candlesticks, denoting the gifts of the Spirit,* come first, apparently selfmoved, and leaving behind them luminous bands, of the seven prismatic colours, in which some have seen the seven sacraments. It is, however, difficult to adapt these to the seven gifts, and also there is a want of appropriateness in making them precede the coming of Christ; so that, on the whole, it seems better to understand the bands merely as the working of the gifts. A distance of ten paces is said to separate the two on the outside, apparently with allusion to the Commandments. Then follow twenty-four elders, representing the books of the Old Testament;† clad and crowned with white, the colour of faith (Heb. xi.). After these comes the car of the Church, surrounded by four Beasts, resembling those of the Apocalypse, but crowned with green, denoting the four Gospels, as specially connected with "Christ, which is our hope" (1 Tim. i. 1). It is drawn by a Grifon, that is, Christ. In his lion (or human) part he combines the colours of the Old and New Testament; while his bird (or divine) part is golden. His wings stretch up out of sight, and have three of the bands on each side and one between them. The symbolism of this part is very obscure. Witte gives up the attempt to explain it, only remarking that none of the explanations hitherto given are satisfactory. Looking to Psalms xxxvi. and lvii., and comparing verses 5 and 7 of the former with 1 and

* See Isaiah xi. 2; also, S. T. ii. 1. Q 6. The gifts are sapientia, intellectus, consilium, fortitudo, scientia, pietas, timor Domini. Cf. Conv. iv. 21.

† It will be observed that Dante does not reckon the Apocryphal books. The number 24 is obtained by reckoning the Pentateuch, the Historical books, and the three ascribed to Solomon as forming only three altogether.
II of the latter, it seems that we must understand them as denoting—the one mercy, the other truth or justice. Then their position with regard to the bands will be made intelligible by a reference to Ps. xxxvi.
10, which in the Vulgate (where it is xxxv. 11) reads as follows:
“Praetende misericordiam tuam scientibus te, et justitiam tuam his qui recto sunt corde;” “O stretch forth thy mercy over those that know thee (scientia), and thy justice over them that are of a right heart (consilium).” On the right side of the car are three ladies, clad in red, white and green, respectively denoting the theological virtues of Love, Faith, and Hope; and on the left side four, the cardinal virtues of Prudence, Temperance, Fortitude, and Justice. These are clad in purple, and are led by Prudence, who has three eyes. Seven elders follow, who are robed, like the others, in white, but crowned with red flowers (“faith, which worketh by love.” Gal. v. 6), and represent the remainder of the New Testament, the Epistles of St. Paul reckoning as one book.

When it is over against the spot where Dante and Statius are standing, the procession halts. Virgil has vanished, and Beatrice appears standing on the car, clad in the three mystic colours, red, white, and green.
She calls Dante to account for his unfaithfulness to her, which, as I have elsewhere said, I take to have been both literal and metaphorical. At least, if with some commentators we are to reject the former notion, it seems hard to see the force of such lines as xxxi. 59. There is much evidence to support the belief that Dante—at all events in his earlier manhood—had yielded to temptations to which men of his strong nature and highly imaginative temperament are prone. After he has been brought to confession and contrition he is drawn by Matilda through the stream of Lethe, and led by the four Virtues—who, as pertaining to the active life, form a link between her and Beatrice—to the breast of the Grifon. At first he sees only the eyes of Beatrice, which are fixed on the Grifon, and reflect alternately the one and the other nature; but at the prayer of the three virtues she unveils her whole face. Dazzled by its splendour, Dante at first sees nothing else, but presently he is aware that the whole procession has turned, and he, Statius, and Matilda take their places by the right wheel of the car, and accompany it. They pass through the wood until they reach a leafless tree. This is primarily the tree of knowledge, but denotes further the virtue of obedience, of which that tree was the test, and as such serves to recall the obedience of Christ. To this the Grifon attaches the pole of the car (that is, the Cross), and it breaks out into leaves and flowers, which by their hue suggest the imperial purple. Henceforth the tree and car together become the symbol of the union of Empire and Church, which, it must be remembered, were in Dante’s eyes merely two aspects of the same institution. At this point Dante loses consciousness, and awakes again to find the whole pageant departed. Beatrice remains, sitting on the ground under the tree, to indicate that the highest perfection of life is only attainable under the Empire; a doctrine which is reasoned out in the first eight chapters of the De Monarchià. The seven lights are now in the hands of the seven Virtues.

The second part of the vision now begins. An eagle descends through the tree, tearing the flowers and making the car totter. This refers to the persecutions endured by the early church at the hands of the first emperors. Next a fox, denoting the earlier heresies, and perhaps more particularly that of Arius, appears in the car, but is driven away by Beatrice. The eagle then descends again, leaving the car covered with its feathers, figuring the donations of Constantine. A dragon appears between the wheels of the car, and, fixing its tail into the floor of it, draws part away. This probably alludes to the Iconoclastic schism (A.D. 728), though many have seen in it an allusion to Mahomed. The two are not incompatible, for, as Mr. Bryce (Holy Roman Empire, chap. iv.) has shown, there was a belief in Dante’s time that Mahomedanism was a result of the schism. The remainder of the car now puts forth more feathers, signifying the further gifts of territory made by Pippin and Charles;* and then seven heads, three on the pole and one in each corner, the first having two horns, the others one. Many interpretations of these have been given, but I do not find that anyone has suggested what appears by far the simplest, namely, that they denote the seven electors, three of whom were mitred—the Archbishops of Mainz, Trier, and Köln—and four temporal princes. It must be remembered that these were originally appointed (circa A.D. 1000) by the Pope;† and hence they are appropriately made to spring from the Church. After this a harlot is seen in the car, together with a giant, who first fondles her, and then, on her

* Holy Roman Empire, chap. iv.; Villani ii. 13. “Confermò alla Chiesa ciò che Pipino suo padre le avea dotato, e oltre a ciò dotò la Chiesa del ducato di Spuleto e di Benivento.”

† Gregory V. (996) says Mr. Bryce; but Villani (iv. 3) says: “Morto Otto il terzo . . . si parve a papà Sergio quarto (this cannot be correct, as Otto died 1002, and the accession of Sergius was 1009) . . . che d’ allora innanzi lo ‘imperio andasse per elezione del più degno, . . . e furono per dicoeto ordinati sette elettori, etc.” Observe that Dante (De Mon. iii. 15) speaks of the electors as “nebula cupiditatis obtenebrati.”
turning her eyes to Dante,* beats her cruelly, and afterwards looses the car from the tree, and draws it out of sight through the wood. In this there can be no doubt that we must see the relations of Philip IV. of France and Boniface VIII., and the removal of the Papal see to Avignon in 1305.

We now come to the third stage of the allegory. Beatrice, attended by the seven ladies, Dante, Statius, and Matilda, moves on a short distance, and then proceeds to foretell what is about to happen. “A five hundred and fifteen” is to slay the harlot and the giant. Over this obscure allusion commentators have puzzled greatly; some even having found in it a prophecy of Victor Emmanuel and Garibaldi. Nearly all have sought an explanation in the letters DXV, which are transposed to DVX, and taken to signify the coming of some great leader. A consideration of dates may make the matter simpler, if we observe further the connection between the mystic number and “the eagle who left his feathers to the car.” “In the autumn of 799,” says Mr. Bryce, “Charles descended from the Alps once more, while Leo revolved deeply the great scheme for whose accomplishment the time was now ripe”—that is, the revival of the Western Empire in Charles’s person. Five hundred and fifteen years from this entry of the first Teutonic Cæsar brings us to 1314, in which year Lewis of Bavaria was elected emperor. Under him, and several great partisan leaders, Matthew Visconti, Can Grande of Verona, Castruccio Castracane, Uguccione della Faggiuola, the cause of the Empire began again to make head against the Papacy. The same year also saw the deaths of Philip the Fair and Clement V., the first of the Avignon popes, after whose death the see remained vacant for two years. To this there is probably an allusion in the “fu, e non è” of xxxiii. 35, and if my view be correct it may serve to fix the date at which the Purgatory was finished. The statement that Beatrice had not moved ten paces when she began her prophecy probably is an allusion to the interval of nine years from 1305 to 1314.

All this, Beatrice says, speaking to mankind in the person of Dante, they might have perceived but for the hardness and dullness of their hearts. God’s command, not to eat of the tree, is violated by those who, forgetting their due obedience, attempt to despoil the Empire of that which in the due order of things belongs to it.

Such appears to be the general outline of what Dante meant his

* “Quod bonifatius voluit respicere ad gentem ytlicam, dimissa gallica, quod nolebat amplius pati servitatem phylippi,” says Comm. Gg.
readers to gather from this obscure allegory. Where a symbolical meaning may be found in every line, almost in every word, it is impossible to be sure that one has not overlooked some points; but a reference to any of the older commentaries will enable the reader abundantly to supply all deficiencies.
GLOSSARY:

Abbagliare, xv. 28, xxxiii. 75, "to dazzle." It appears to be from a simple form bagliare for bargliare, containing the particle ber- which is also found in the forms be-, bar-, and bis- (Fr. bëvue, berlue, etc.). Various origins are given for this: Diez is inclined to suggest the Lat. bis, the idea of "double" passing into that of "confused," and so "awry," as in Sp. bisojo. This, however, does not account for the rest of the word. It seems far more likely that it contains the same root as blear, which again is connected with blink, and Germ. blicken, all being from a root, BHARG, whence also bright (Skeat). Curtius also connects Gr. φλέγω, Lat. fulgeo. The word is thus probably a survival of some word in the spoken Latin, which has otherwise disappeared.

Abbandonare, iii. 20, etc.; v. sub bando.

Accorgere, most often in the reflexive form accorgersi, i. 126, 67, ii. v. 25, vi. 123, etc., "to make to understand." From Lat.

---

x This Glossary does not profess to be exhaustive. I have given only such words as seemed interesting either from their obscure derivation, or from some peculiarity in their use, or else as being specially illustrative of some principle of Romance etymology. The term "late Latin" is used in the case of such words as, though not in use in classical times, are to be found in Forcellinus. "A Latin" implies that the word, though not found, might have existed. "Cleasby" is used to denote Cleasby and Vigfusson's Icelandic Dictionary. It must not, of course, be supposed that any Italian words are derived from the Old Norse or Icelandic; but Gothic, which has supplied many words to Italian, is a closely-allied language, and we can in many cases use Icelandic to reconstruct forms which the Gothic probably possessed, but of which, through the scantiness of its remaining literature, all trace is now lost.
ad-corrigere, "to put in the right way towards," hence reflexively "to-understand," "perceive." In vi. 123, where I have, with most of my predecessors, rendered "l' accorgere nostro," "our comprehension," it may perhaps be better to take it as "our guidance." See also scorgere.

Adorezzare, i. 123; v. sub aura.

Aduggiare, xx. 44, "to overshadow." From uggia, "shade." Diez suggests a Kymric hudd. But it is better to take it from the Teutonic root, which gives Icel. ugga, "to fear," adj. uggligr, Eng. ugly. The meaning of "shadow" is probably derived, not original, as it always seems to mean an unwholesome shade. [Ubbia, "fear," may well be from the same. Cf. the forms debbo and deggio.]

Affanno, iv. 95, xiv. 109, etc., "toil, distress;" verb tr. affannare; ii. 111, etc.; O. Fr. ahan, verb intr. ahaner; Sp. afan, afano, afanar. Ducange derives the Fr. word from a supposed interjection, han!—the sound of a forcible expiration, as of a man making a strong effort (compare the well-known "sigh" of a pavement). This would suit the Fr. very well, but it is difficult to see how the h could have become f. Diez suggests a Kymric afan, "strife, unrest," but this presents the same difficulty, as it would hardly have got into Italian except through French. There is, however, a Prov. afan, which may have been the link.

Affollar, xxiv. 72, "to press," simple form follar, Fr. fouler, Sp. hollar. Lat. fullare does not exist, but the root is found in fulo.—Diez. (Mr. Skeat, however, thinks that the notion of bleaching, rather than that of pressing, is the original one.) It seems more probable that the word is here formed from jollis, and means literally "to pant," as I have rendered it.

Agio, xiv. 109, "ease"; verb tr. disagiare, xix. 140; adj. agevole, iii. 51, xii. 93; sub. agevolanza, xxxi. 28; verb tr. agevolare, ix. 57. Fr. aise. A word of most obscure origin. Most of the modern European families of language contain something like it. Gothic asēts, "easy, pleasant," A.-S. eaþ- (prefix), eaxe, adj. "easy"; also eax, "wealth"; Icel. aurð- (prefix), aurðr; Gael. adhais, "leisure, ease." The absence of the word from Spanish would seem to be against its Gothic origin; and its presence in Italian in an earlier form than the French, against its introduction from any Celtic language. May not the adj. agevole (from a Latin agibilis) be the parent-word, agio being formed from it by analogy? In this case Eng. ease would be unconnected with Fr. aise, but might have been modified, according to a frequent practice, by its influence.
GLOSSARY.

Ammannare, xxiii. 107, xxix. 49. "to bind in a sheaf." From mannua, Sp. maña (to be distinguished from maña, "cunning"), "a sheaf, bundle." The Spanish word seems to be akin to manada, "a handful," and if so, must be from manus (cf. manus), though the doubling of the n in Italian is unusual.

Ammiccare, xxi. 109, "to make a quick sign." Lat. micare, "to move quickly," of the hands, ears, or (in Ennius, quoted by Servius to Aen. x. 396), of the eyes. (Diez seems only to know micare in its secondary meaning of "to shine.")

Arra, xxviii. 93, "earnest, pledge." Fr. arrhes, Sp. arras. From Lat. arrha, arrhabo; this through Gr. ἀρραβῶν from the Hebrew. It is not clear whether Eng. earnest, M. E. eres, Gael. earlas, are connected or not with the Rom. word.—Skeat.

Astio, vi. 20, "hatred, spite." From Goth. haifist, "strife, division" (Diez); perhaps modified in meaning by Germ. hassien.

Astore, viii. 104, "a hawk." Fr. aion, Sp. asor. From asturias, a supposed derivative of astur, "a hawk," so called from the district of Asturia in Spain.—Littre. Diez prefers to take it from aceptorem, a vulgar form of accipitrem.

Attuare, xxxiii. 48, "to stop up," for atturare. Sp. aturar. The root appears in Latin in the compound obturare. Blanc wishes to read in this passage attusia, for which, in presence of the Spanish form, there seems no need.

Aura, i. 17, xxiv. 146, etc., and in xxviii. 16, in form ora, "air, breeze;" sub. orezza, xxiv. 150; verb intr. adorezzare, i. 123, "to be shady;" from Lat. aura. With the form ora cf. O. Fr. ore, whence orage. In i. 17 it seems to mean "a heavy air," contrasted with aer, this use being perhaps suggested by Aristotle, De Mundo, cap. 4: ἀέρας καλοῦμεν τὰς ἐς ἴηροῦ φερομένας ἔκπνος. Adorezzare is directly from rezzo (Inf. xvii. 87, etc.) or the longer form oresso; this from auritium, which would mean originally "a breezy "place," hence "cool," and hence "shady," by a converse process to that which has formed Fr. abri, "shelter," from apricis, "sunny" (cf. Icel. hlí, "lee," hlúja, "to shelter," hlýr, "warm"; also calma, "calm," through Latin from Greek καῦμα, "heat").

Avacciare, iv. 116, vi. 27, "to hasten;" (adv. avacco, Inf. x. 116, etc.) Diez derives from abactiare, a supposed frequentative of abigere, and if this be correct, avacco must be a syncopated participle.
An objection to it is that it is inconsistent with any known meaning of abigere. It must be said, too, that avaccio looks far more like a compound with a. May it not be from Germ. wachsen? (Cf. Fr. avachir, from weichen, O. G. weichjan.).

Avvampare, viii. 84, "to burn." From vampo = Lat. vapor (as sarto = sartor). Hence also Sp. hampa, "brag," hampón, "pompous."

Badare, iv. 75, "to gaze." Fr. bayer, O. Fr. biler (whence participle béant). Originally "to open the mouth," hence "to stand a-gape" (stare a bada, Inf. xxxi. 139), and so "to wait," "to watch." Probably from ba, a sound expressive of opening the mouth, from which come badigliare, Fr. biller, Fr. badin and bahir, also (?) Sp. badajo, "the clapper of a bell," and met. "a chattering."

Balzo, iv. 47, ix. 2, etc., "a gallery." I have adopted this spelling in the text, as it has the weight of authority, but balzo, "a cliff," does not in every place suit the meaning, so that it must either be another form or a corruption of balco (which some MSS. have in ix. 2), from O. G. balcho, Icel. bdikr, Eng. balk, "a beam" or "timber" (cf. bulk-head). Hence it comes to mean "a platform," "balcony," or "gallery."

Bando, xxii. 102, xxx. 13, "a proclamation." Fr. ban, Sp. bando, Eng. ban, banns. (Verbs, bandire, bannir, banish.) From low Lat. bandum, this (it being imported as in thunder) from O. G. bannan, "to proclaim," hence "prohibit by edict," "interdict." From this the notion of banishing is easily derived. Abandonare appears to come directly from the O. Fr., in which bandon had the meaning "permission," hence "order," M. E. baundoun. Thus mettre à bandon, or abandonner qce à qquin. "to put it at his orders," "leave it to him."

Bastare, i. 93, etc. "to suffice." Sp. bastar. Only found in French in the interj. baste, adj. bastant, which are probably borrowed direct from Italian. The original idea seems to be "to support," and the root appears in bastire, Fr. bâtir; baste, Fr. bâton; Lat. basteria, "a litter," whence basteria in xxx. 16; and asto (also Sp.) from bât, "a pack-saddle." From this last word is almost certainly derived bastardo (xiv. 99), Fr. bâtard, as if "begotten on a pack-saddle," for Cleasby's attempt (s. v. bastardr) to find a Scandinavian origin for it, though ingenious, is hardly satisfactory, since the word does not appear in Scandinavian writers, as he himself admits, until it is used of William the Conqueror. Moreover fille de bast actually occurs in O. Fr. It may be observed that Sp. basto means as an adj. “coarse, rude,” as if the “pack-saddle” suggested the manners of a camp. The root of these words is obscure, but cf. Gr. βαστάζειν.

Biaða, ii. 124, xxxiii. 51, “corn.” Also biado. Fr. blé, O. Fr. blê. Probably from ablatum, plur. ablata, late Lat. for “carried corn.”—Diez. (But Littre rather doubts, and it is an objection that both biada and blé mean “standing corn.”) The older derivation is from A. S. bleð, “fruit,” or some kindred Germ. root; but it is a question whether this word is Teutonic, and it can hardly have got into Italian from A. S. direct. On the whole I do not feel sure that it does not contain some form of Germ. blatt, Icel. bláð, Eng. blade.

Bigio, xx. 54, xxvi. 108, “dark gray, dark.” Fr. bis and (dial.) bise. It seems originally to have denoted “a yellowish gray,” and the most satisfactory derivation takes it from Lat. bysus, from byssus, Gr. βύσσος (an Eastern word), in the sense of “coarse linen cloth.” Cf. Sp. base from bombacéus, “made of cotton,” and v. sub buio.

Biondo, iii. 107, viii. 34, “fair-haired.” Fr. blond. Derivation very uncertain. A. S. blönden-seax seems to mean “with hair in which gray is blended with dark.” Diez suggests a connection with Icel. blauðr, “soft, weak,” which Mr. Skeat thinks absurd. It may, however, be observed that in O. Fr. the word seems to be applied to women almost exclusively, and that blauðr is used as a taunt to the beardless Njal in the saga; and, further, is actually used as = “female” of animals. In any case it has apparently got modified in meaning by bianco and blanc.

Bisogna, xiii. 62, xxv. 6, xxxiii. 29, “business.” Fr. besogne; and bisogno (perhaps in xxv. 6), “necessity,” Fr. besoin. Simpler forms are O. It. sogna, Fr. soin, “care.” Diez connects with Goth. sunja, “truth,” O. G. sunnis, Icel. sannr, “true,” Eng. sooth, and so with Icel. syn, “the repelling of a charge,” whence comes the notion of “hindrance.” The prefix bi- or be- is, however, a difficulty. Diez sees objections to the “pejorative” bis (v. sub abbagliare), which Littre (who has an affection for this particle), thinks of insufficient weight. Why should not Germ. besommen (from besinnen), or some older form of the same, answer all requirements? [N.B. Eng. business is almost certainly quite unconnected with the Rom. words.]

Bordone (1), xxviii. 18, "a ground-bass." Fr. bourdon, Sp. bordon, Eng. burden. Almost certainly formed from the sound; though Diez is inclined to derive it from the next word, taking it to mean originally "an organ pipe," which resembles a staff.

Bordone (2), xxxiii. 78, "a pilgrim’s staff." Fr. and M. E. bourdon, Sp. bordon. Diez derives it from low Lat. burdo, "a mule," comparing Sp. muleta, which means both "a mule," and "a crutch." Skeat suggests bordone (1); the staff being supposed to contain a pitch-pipe. But O. Fr. bohurt, behoure, "a jousting lance," connected probably with Welsh hurdd, "a ram" (and hence, "a push"), and so with Fr. haurter, Ital. urtare, Eng. hurt, seems to offer a better derivation. In this case the word would have come into Italian from French, which would be natural, as pilgrims would more probably pass from France into Italy than the other way.

Bordello, vi. 75, "a brothel." Fr. bordel, Sp. burdel. Originally "a hut," from Goth. baurd, Eng. board. [The word appears, in spite of the similarity, to be unconnected with the English, which is connected with break (cf. brittle), and meant "a transgressor," thus primarily denoting a person, not a place.—Skeat. It is curious, however, that in the passage referred to, Dante seems to use the word very much in this sense, contrasting bordello with donna.]

Bramar, xv. 78, xxiii. 35, "desire, longing." Verb bramare, viii. 75, etc., adj. bramoso, xxiv. 108. Fr. bramer, "to bellow," so Sp. bramar. This seems to be the original meaning, from O. G. breman, corresponding with Gr. βρέμω.—Diez. For the change of signification cf. latrare in Lucr. ii. 17, and Hor. 2 Sat. ii. 18.

Briga, vii. 55, "hindrance," xvi. 117, "strife;" brigare, xx. 125, "to strive;" brigata, xiv. 106, "a troop." Fr. brigue, briguer ("to intrigue"), brigade, Sp. bregar. From Goth. brikan, "to break," whence the idea of strife or contention easily comes. Cf. Icel. brjotask, "to struggle, fight," refl. of brjótia, "to break." Brigata was originally "a troop of soldiers," brigante, "a soldier," brigantino, "a ship of war." The Fr. word no doubt comes from the Italian, the native Fr. form being broyer, Fr. bregar.

Brina, xxi. 47, "hoar-frost." Probably from Lat. pruina: but a Venetian form borina suggests that it may be from vapor.—Diez. The Fr. bruine, "a cold fog, drizzle," however, seems conclusive for the first.

Brolo, xxix. 147, "a garden," lit. "thicket." Fr. brosol, Eng.
GLOSSARY.

Broyle (a local name near Chichester). From low Lat. brogilium, this from Celt. brog, "a swelling up." Diez, however, considers that the suffix -il implies a German origin, and takes it from M. Germ. brogan, "to rise up." Ital. broglio, Fr. broiler, are perhaps from the same root.

Brullo, xiv. 91, "stripped." (Also brollo. Muratori gives a form sbrillo, which he derives from esperilus, for esperilatus, "stripped of his wallet" (perula). Diez approves of this, but points out that the ex is not required. (Cf. popilus, from popilus. But is not the quantity of pérula a difficulty?

Buccia, xxiii. 25, "hide, skin." Probably from the same root as buca. (Cf. M. E. "hole," "the hull, or husk of a nut," and "hole" = "hollow.")

Calere, viii. 12, xxx. 135, xxxii. 5, "to be of importance." Fr. caler (obsolete) chaloir, Sp. (obsolete) caler. From Lat. calere, "to grow warm." Usually impersonal; but in xxxii. 5 it seems to mean "to heed;" and cf. Fr. nonchalant.

Cammino, ii. 11, etc., "a road." Fr. chemin, Sp. camino. From low Lat. camnus, this almost certainly from Kymric caman.

Latin seems to have had the meaning of "a nod," and also of "the eyelash." V. Forcell. s. v. It is probably akin to cilium, and cf. cincinnus, "a lock of hair." These are all connected by the idea of quick movement, and seem to contain the same root as Gr. κυέω, Lat. cieo.

Cerchio, i. 78, etc., and cerchia, xxii. 33, "a circle." From Lat. circulus. Blanc makes a distinction between the use of the two forms, the masculine being, according to him, "a circle" generally, while the feminine is usually (as Inf. xviii. 3) "a circular enclosure." In the passage referred to above, however, this distinction does not seem to be maintained. From cerchio comes verb cerchiare; while cercare, Fr. chercher, Eng. search, is from low Lat. circare.

Cerro, xxxi. 71, "an oak." From Lat. cerrus (described by Pliny, Hist. Nat. xvi. 8, apparently a kind of holm-oak).

Compilare, xxii. 27, "to heap up." Fr. compiler, Sp. compilar, Eng. compile. From Lat. compilare, "to plunder," "pillage." The original idea is thus "to collect stolen goods." Compilatus, exstructus.—Du Cange. (It is curious that Forcellinus mentions a supposed derivation of Lat. pilare from Gr. πιλον, "quia fures stipant ea, quae furantur," showing that the two ideas are easily connected.) [The form compigliare is also found in the sense of "to embrace;" v. sub pigliare.]

Conocchia, xxii. 26, "a skein," properly "a distaff." Fr. quenouille (which also has both meanings), Germ. kunkel. From Lat. conucula, for colucula, from colus.

Conto, ii. 56, xiii. 105, xv. 12, "known;" sub. contezza, xx. 29, xxiv. 36. O. Fr. cointe, whence accounter, Eng. acquaint, M. Eng. queynote (= cunning). From Lat. cognitus. The word has clearly been confused with conto, or as it is spelt in Conv. iv. 25, comto, from comptus, from which there is also an O. Fr. cointe, and, as I venture to think, M. E. queynote, in the sense of "elegant," hence "curious," mod. quaient, which usually has a notion of prettiness. This may explain the use of conto in ii. 56, where clearly some other than the usual meaning is wanted; though on the whole I prefer the explanation which I have given in the note.

Crucchiato, xxii. 39, "to anger," contracted from corruciare. Fr. courroucer. From corruncio, Fr. courroux. According to Diez this is for colleruccio, from Lat. cholera, "gall," this from Gr. χολή. (It is to be noticed that cholera does not appear to have been used, like bilis, metaphorically.) Littré, however, prefers to take it from a supposed corruptium, from corrupus; and considering that the l does not appear in any of the cognate languages, that there is an O. Fr. corros, and that corrotto is used in Italian (e. g. Villani vi. 45) in the sense of "vexation," he is most likely right. The form cruciare has probably been influenced by cruciare, from crux; cf. Eng. cross.
GLOSSARY.

Cruna, x. 16, xxi. 37, "the eye of a needle." From Lat. corona. (Diez. But ?)

Cucire, xiii. 71, "to sew"; ricucire, xxv. 139. Fr. coudre, Sp. coser and cusir. From low Lat. cusire, a corruption of consuire. Sb. costura, xiii. 83, from consutura.

Dileguarsi, xiv. 134, xvii. 73, "to melt away." From Lat. deliquare. Fr. déliger, with which Diez connects it, probably comes, through délai, from dilatum, part. of differre.

Disgroppare, ix. 126, "to loosen a knot." From groppo (Inf. xi. 96, etc.) "a knot." Fr. groupe, Sp. grupo, Eng. group. From Germ. kropp, Icel. kroppr ("a hump"), Eng. crop. The root is, however, also found in Celtic. From the same are groppa, Fr. croupé and croupier, Sp. cumpa. (Eng. crouch, is, according to Mr. Skeat, rather a form of crook.)

Divisare, xxix. 82, "to devise, describe." O. Fr. deviser, from sb. des, Eng. device, Sp. divisa. From low Lat. divisare, this from dividere, the sequence of meaning being "to divide, to distinguish, to explain," whence come further the modern Fr. sense of "to converse," and Eng. "to contrive."

Doga, xii. 105, "a barrel-stave." Fr. douve, Germ. daube. From late Lat. doga, "a vessel," used of the measurement of ships, cups, etc. (Hence perhaps dogger.) This from Gr. δοχή, which seems to have been used for "a reservoir." Diez traces the meaning of "a barrel-stave" from the banks enclosing a reservoir. It is to be observed, however, that Icel. þúfa signifies "a mound," and that according to Cleasby (s. v.) Germ. daube has locally the same meaning. Now þúfa cannot have come from daube, but is cognate with it, so that the "mound" may be the original sense of the German, which may have passed into that of "stave," through the stages suggested by Diez, in which case the Italian and French would be derived from it. For the v cognate with g cf. tregua.

Drudo, xxxii. 155, "a paramour." O. Fr. dru (distinct from dru, adj.). Originally, in good sense, merely "a friend." Low Lat. drudus, from O. Germ. trud, mod. traut, Icel. trúir, Eng. true, trusty.

Fango, xvi. 129, xix. 104, "mire." Fr. fange, Sp. fango ("the Glossary.

Ooze at the bottom of the sea”). From Goth. fami, gen. famjís, “mud,” Eng. fen.—Diez, Gr. Rom. i. 297. From Lat. famex, acc. famícem.—Littré. It is hard to say which of these two is more likely to be correct. Famícem would suit the French, but hardly the Italian—though we have in Dante sorco, from sorícem. It is also possible that fangoso, from famícosus (which appears to have existed in low Latin) may be the original. Fámes, however, seems only to have meant “an ulcer,” so that on the whole the Germanic origin would seem the more probable.

Farfalla, x. 125, “a butterfly.” From O. G. fisáltra, Icel. fisfríldi. Latin papílio seems further off, though Diez takes it to be the more immediate origin of the word, through the form parpágione; but all these words are clearly connected, and also (?) Gr. πομήδως, “a bubble.”

Fello, vi. 94, “fierce.” O. Fr. fel, Eng. fell. From low Latin felo, the form fellone being from felonem (cf. ladro and ladrone from latro and latremem). O. G. fillan, “to scourge,” may be connected. Mr. Skeat, however, doubts the connection of fell and felon, and is inclined to think the latter is Celtic, e.g. Welsh fel, “wily.”

Fiata, ix. 111, etc., “a time,” xxvi. 101, etc., “a period of time.” Fr. fois, Sp. ves. Probably from a low Lat. vicata, this from vicem, the Fr. and Sp. being from vices. The O. Fr. forms fioe and foite, and Prov. vegada, agree better with this than with the derivative from via, which Diez prefers; and a further argument against his view is that the f- in fiata is usually a separate syllable, while the vi- in via is not (ix. 111, is one of the few exceptions).

Fiaccarsi, vii. 75, “to be split.” The meaning, both here and in Inf. vii. 14, and xii. 15, seems to suggest a connection rather with Eng. flake, Icel. flakna, than the derivation which Diez gives, from Lat. fíaccus, fíaccidus. In Inf. vi. 54, however, the latter seems to suit better. The two can hardly be akin; though the resemblance of Eng. flag, “a slice,” or “flake of stone,” and flag, “to droop,” is at least curious.

Fianco, iv. 74, etc., “side, flank.” Fr. flanc. From Lat. fláccus, “soft,” as being the soft part between the hip and the ribs. Cf. Germ. weiche in the same sense.

Ficcare, xiii. 43, etc. “to fix,” usually of the eyes. Fr. ficher, Sp. hincar. From a Lat. figicare, a (supposed) frequentative of figere, as vellicare of vellere.

GLOSSARY.

sfigarsi, xxiv. 72. Probably from Lat. fuga, "flight," but focus is also suggested, in which case it would be another form of fuoco. Fouge does not appear in French till the sixteenth century, and in Spanish the secondary meaning—for the word also means "flight"—may have been borrowed from the French. Littre gives also fougon, a southern word for "a ship's kitchen," so that the word, if from focus, may have come through the Provençal.

Forestà, xxvii. 2, etc., "a forest." Fr. forêt, Sp. florista, Germ. Forst. From low Lat. foresta; this from foris, "outside," i.e. "unclosed." Cf. forestiere, "a foreigner," with which compare selvaggio, savage, from silva.

Forrire, xii. 132, xxiii. 6, "to furnish, complete." Fr. fournir, Sp. fornir. From O. G. frumjan, Icel. fremsja. That this is the true derivation is shown by the Prov. forms, formir, fromir. Connected with former, further, sub. and verb (in the latter of which the same notion appears), Germ. fördern, Lat. primus, etc.

Frassà, xxiv. 118, xxxii. 50, "a branch." Fr. frasque (in a different sense), Sp. frasca. Diez suggests that it is for viraasca, from virare, which does not seem very satisfactory. Provençal frascar means "to break" (Fr. fracasser), which suggests that it may be "a broken branch," only that in Dante (except perhaps Inf. xiii. 114), it seems to mean always "a branch on the tree." May it not be from fraxinus, originally "an ash-branch"? [Cf. Fr. buisson, from buis, buxus, "box."

Fregiare, i. 38, "to adorn," and sfregiarsi, viii. 128, "to lose adornment." Diez is inclined to connect it with Fr. friser, Eng. frizzle, etc., in the sense of "to curl" (whence also frieze in architecture), and to derive it from some supposed German form. We have, however, in Icel. fríðr, "handsome," verb fríða, "to adorn." May there not have been a Goth. fridjan corresponding to this? [Eng. fringe is quite unconnected, being through Fr. from Lat. fimbria; I have therefore altered my rendering of i. 38, as likely to be misleading.]

Fretta, iii. 10, etc., "haste," vb. affrettarsi, x. 87. From vb. fretare, originally "to rub," from Lat. fricature, frequentative of fricare; Fr. frotter.

Frugare, iii. 3, etc., "to urge." Sp. hurgar. From, Lat. furca, literally "to push as with a fork." (It also means "to grope about," e.g. Bocc. Decam. Day x. Nov. 6.)

Furia, xxxiii. 44. There is some doubt as to the meaning of this word. It is, according to Diez, used only by Dante; and occurs in only two other passages, Inf. xii. 90, and Par. ix. 75. The derivation from Lat. fur is the only one which seems satisfactory. The idea of “desertion” (in Inf. xii. 90, and Purg. xxxiii. 44), or of “concealment” (in Par. ix. 75), seems to be the fundamental one, and both these can be got from that of “stealing.” Compare our use of “to steal away,” and “stealth,” and Gr. λανθάνω, λήστης, λάθρα.

Galoppo, xxiv. 94, “a gallop.” Fr. galop, Sp. galope. Verb galopper; according to Diez and Littré from O. G. gahlaufan (mod. laufen, with intensive particle prefixed). But the existence of a Flemish and M. E. walop makes this very doubtful. It seems better to take this as the original form of the word (w passing regularly into g), and connect it with Germ. wallen, “to boil, bubble,” Eng. well, wallop (in “pot-wallop”); further with walk, wallow, wälzen, Icel. válka, Lat. volvere (cf. Virgil’s “sinuetque alterna volumina crurum”); the common idea being that of “rolling” or “turning.”

Gamba, i. 51, etc. “a leg.” Fr. jambe, Sp. gamba. From late Lat. gamba, “the pastern,” Gr. καμή, “a bending, joint.” The same root with a similar meaning occurs in Eng. ham.

Gemere, xxv. 44, “to trickle, drip.” The word (which also occurs in this sense Inf. xiii. 41), is probably from Lat. gemere, though that is not found with this meaning. Its original signification, however, according to Curtius, is “to be full,” Gr. γέμω, whence the idea of overflowing easily follows.

Giostra, xxii. 42, “a joust,” and verb giostrare, xx. 74. Fr. joute, jouter, Sp. justa, justar. From Lat. justa, “near,” the original meaning being merely “to meet.” This is retained in the dialect of Berry, where jouter means “to border upon.”

Gota, xiii. 84, xxxi. 40, etc. “the cheek,” hence “mouth.” Fr. joue. According to Diez from Lat. gabīta, “a dish,” which again may be connected with Gr. γαβίτα, “a pail.” The idea seems to be of something round and hollow. With the use of the word for guancia compare that of piota for pianta. There seems to have been a tendency to adopt words of somewhat similar but harder sound for the more common words, thus otta for ora, guatara for guardare, etc.

Gramo, xxii. 42, “wretched.” From Germ. gram (sb.), Icel. gramr. The root is the same as in grimm, grimrs, Eng. grim.

Gridare, ii. 28, etc., “to cry,” and sb. grido, xi. 95, etc. Fr. crier, Sp. gritar. From Lat. quīritare, said to be a frequentative of Glossary.

queri, but the quantity of the second i is against this. The old view was that it meant “to call on the Quirites for aid” (cf. the Jersey "Haro"). It is more likely that it was formed from the sound of some animal’s cry, and was afterwards generalised. [Eng. cry, “to weep,” though doubtless modified by this, would seem to be originally distinct from it, and to belong to Icel. gráta, A. S. gratan, Scotch greet.]

Grotta, i. 48, iii. 90, xxii. 65, etc. “a cavern,” hence “a rock.” Fr. grotte, Sp. gruta. From Lat. crypta, low Lat. grúpta (which was probably the older form; cf. Burrus for Pyrrhus), this from Gr. κρύπτη. In the Venetian Alps the word frequently occurs in the form croda.

Guadagno, xxiv. 129, “gain,” verb guadagnare, xx. 77. Fr. gagner. From O. G. weidanjan = weidenbn, “to pasture” (modern weiden). That this is the true derivation is made clear by the O. Fr. form gaaigner, and mod. gagne; also by Sp. guadaña, “a sithe.” Eng. gain is from a totally different root, being identical with Icel. gagn, but has probably been modified by Fr. gain; Sp. ganar, if it be not distinct from both, is most likely connected with the Scand. root, which also appears in Gothic.

Guizzare, xvii. 42, xxv. 26, “to move quickly to and fro.” From Germ. (dial.) witsen, Eng. twitch.

Impacciare, xi. 75, xxi. 5, “to hamper, hinder.” Sp. empachar. From impactiare, a supposed frequentative of impingere (cf. avacciare).

—Diez. The original meaning of pango, “to fix,” Gr. πήγεσθαι, suits this fairly well; but the compound impingere seems only to mean “to strike against.” The word may, however, have got modified in sense by Fr. empêcher, which is from impedire (Eng. impeach). It is curious that no one seems to have suggested Germ. einpacken, which, in two of the three passages where the word occurs in D. C. (Inf. xxii. 151, and Purg. xxi. 5), would suit the sense very well.

Indarno, iii. 48, etc. “in vain.” From Slavonic dorno, “at a gift,” and so “fruitlessly.” The word is curious as being the only one which has come into Italian from Slavonic.

Ingannare, xiii. 122, etc., “to deceive.” O. Fr. enganer, Sp. engañar. From low Lat. gannare, “to mock,” sub. gannum. Probably from O. G. gaman, Eng. game. Cf. Eng. gannum, which has both meanings, and though now a slang word, is, according to Mr. Skeat, merely the M. E. gamen.

Ingombrare, iii. 30, xxxi. 142, “to encumber,” and sgombrare, xxxiii. 133, “to discharge.” Fr. encombrer, décembrer, Sp. escombrar,
"to clear." [Encumber, "to raise up," descumber (in part. descumbrado) "to level," are from cumbre = Lat. culmen.] From low Lat. cumbrus, modified from cumulus. Fr. combler is directly from cumulare.

Intoppo, xxiv. 96, xxxiii. 42, "a collision," hence "assault." From toppo, "a block," Sp. tope, connected with Germ. topf, Icel. toppr, Eng. tuft and top (in both meanings), also Fr. tourpet and toupee. The Sp. word well illustrates the connection between the various senses of these different forms. It denotes "a cross-piece on a pointed instrument," "an obstacle," "a quarrel," "the truck on a masthead," "the top of anything," while topar is "to run against," topetar, "to butt."

Lai, ix. 13, "songs." Fr. lai, Eng. lay. It seems to be a Celtic word, Welsh llais, Gael. laoidh. At all events it appears as a Breton term in early French literature, from which Dante possibly borrowed it. Otherwise one would be inclined to connect it more directly with Germ. lied.

Laido, xxxii. 121, "ugly." Fr. laid. From O. G. leid (the modern word has undergone a slight change in meaning). Icel. laiti, A. S. lâð, Eng. loath-some.

Landa, xxvii. 98, "a plain." Fr. lande, Sp. landa, M. E. laund, modern lawn. It is a question whether the word comes immediately from Germ. land, or Celt. lann, Welsh llân, "an inclosure." The two, however, are probably cognate. It may be noted that in xiii. 79, Gg. reads landa for banda, and glosses "i. e. planicie extremâ;" with which compare the use of "lands" for the overlapping edges of the strakes in a "clinker-built" boat.

Lasciare, i. 3, iv. 128, etc., "to leave, allow." Fr. laisser (probably modified by Germ. lassen, as we have also lâcher), Sp. laxar. From Lat. laxare.

Lega, xv. 121, "a league." Fr. lieue, Sp. legua. From low Lat. leuca, a Gaulish word.

Lisciare, viii. 102, "to smooth." From liscio, Fr. lisse, Sp. liso ("plain," "even"), this from O. G. liki, modern leise, the root being the same as in Gr. λισσος, λειός.

Lista, i. 36, iv. 42, xxix. 77, "a band." Fr. liste, and (derivative), listere, Sp. lista. From O. G. lista, modern leiste, Eng. list.

Lusinga, i. 92, "flattery." O. Fr. losenge, Sp. lisonja. From a low Lat. laundemia (like vindemia), as appears from the Prov. lausenga, from which the Italian word probably comes. This is the derivation given by Diez; but Goth. laus, "empty, vain," akin to Icelandic. lausung, "lying," Eng. leasing, seems to offer one even more satisfactory. In any case the i in the Spanish word is abnormal; it may be an instance of the converse change to that which has made domandare from dimandare in Italian.

Magagna, vi. 110, xv. 46, "a blemish." A word of very obscure origin. There is an O. Fr. méhaing, low Lat. mahamium, from which Eng. maim (also spelt mahim), appears to come.—Skeat. In Breton we find machan in the same sense; but Diez is inclined to take the Lat. word from a supposed O. G. man-hamjan (Icel. hamla, Eng. hamper, cf. Germ. hammel). He mentions, however, that in the dialect of Como the simple form maga is found, which suggests that the word may be from the root MAK, "to pound, bruise," found in macho, machula, (?) malleus, etc. Cf. Sp. majar and magullar, "to bruise."

Malvagio, xiv. 111, xix. 144, "bad." Fr. mauvais. From Goth. baļovaisi, "wicked," modified by confusion with Lat. malius. The adj. is not found, but is assumed from the sub. baļovaei, "wickedness, malice." The first part of this word implies a sub. baļ, Icel. böi, Eng. bale, as in baleful; the termination is cognate with German wesun.

Masnada, ii. 130, "a troop." Sp. mesnada. From low Lat. mansionata, "a household." Hence also Fr. ménage.

Menare, iv. 120, etc., "to lead, guide." Fr. mener, Sp. menear. From Lat. minare, used (e.g. by Ausonius) of driving or leading cattle, the original idea probably being the same as in minari, "to threaten," hence "shout at."

Mentre, ii. 26, etc., "while." Sp. mientras. From Lat. dum interim. Of several suggested derivations this is the only one which fits at once the form and the meaning of the word. [The Spanish form looks as if there had been an idea that trans (in its later sense of "between," Italian tra) entered into the composition of the word.]

Merlo (1), xx. 6, "battlement." Fr. merlon (the space between two embrasures in a battery), Sp. merlon. From Lat. merulius, diminutive of moerus = murus. Littré suggests a derivation from the next word, which does not seem applicable.

Merlo (2), xiii. 123, "a blackbird." Fr. merle, Sp. merla. From Lat. merulus; in classical Latin merula.

Moderno, xvi. 42, xxvi. 113, "modern." Fr. moderne, Sp. moderno. From late Lat. modernus, this from modo "now."

Montone, viii. 134, "a sheep, ram." Fr. mouton. From low Lat. muldo, originally "a wether," from mutulus (cf. Germ. hammel). Littré prefers to take it from the Celtic, e.g. Gael. mul, Bret. maoud.
But are not these rather from the Latin? The objection to the derivation first given, that montone is used for “a ram,” does not seem serious when we see that Germ. widder (Eng. wether) = “a ram,” and ocks (Eng. ox) = “a bull.”

Motto, ii. 25, etc., “a word.” Fr. mot, Sp. mole. From low Lat. (probably colloquial) muttum. Mutiere (Eng. mutter) is found in Terence and Persius.

Mozzo, xvi. 15, “cut off.” Fr. mousse, “blunted,” Sp. mocho. From Germ. mutzen; connected with Lat. mutilus, from which the Spanish probably comes directly.

Musco, iii. 81, xiv. 48, “a muzzle,” and verb ammusarsi, xxvi. 35. Fr. museau. Diez is inclined, on account of the Prov. mursel, to derive it from Lat. morsus, the r disappearing as in Fr. dos, from dorsum; but it seems simpler to take it from Goth. munths, A. S. mūð, Eng. mouth.

Noiare, ix. 87, “to hurt,” from noia. Fr. ennui; Sp. enojo, Eng. sb. and vb. annoy. From Lat. in odio (esse, habere, etc.). Dante’s use of the verb suggests a confusion with nocere.

Ordire, xxxiii. 140, “to set up the warp in the loom,” hence “arrange.” Fr. ourdir, Sp. urdir. From low Lat. ordire = ordiri, “to begin.”

Orlo, iv. 34, xi. 128, xxvi. 1, “an edge, rim.” Fr. orlé, verb ourler (“to hem”), Sp. orla, orilla. From a Lat. orula, diminutive of ora.

Orma, v. 2, ix. 60, xvii. 21, “a track.” From Gr. ὀσμή, “smell,” hence “scent.” Diez, who identifies it with Sp. husmo, verb husrmar. (For the change of s into r, cf. siurma, from κέλευσμα.)

Orza, xxxii. 117, “the larboard sheet” (or rather, perhaps, “brace”). Fr. orze, Sp. orza (in the phrase orza de avant, = “starboard your helm”). Probably from Germ. (dialect) lurz, “left,” and so for lora; the l, by a common confusion, having been taken for the article, and therefore dropped.

Pargolezza, xxxi. 59, “a girl,” verb pargoleggiare, “to play.” From Lat. parvulus. For the interchangeableness of g and v we may compare Pagolo from Paulus with cavalo from caulis.

Picchiare, x. 120, “to squeeze together.” Fr. pincer, O. Fr. pincher, Eng. pinch. So I think we must take the word here, as the ordinary sense of “to knock” is quite out of place. Diez connects pincer with a Germ. pfetsen. (But v. sub pigliare.)
GLOSSARY.

Picciolo, iii. 9, etc., “small,” also piccolo. Sp. pequeño. Diez takes it from pic in the sense of “a point,” hence “a dot,” and considers that Fr. petit is from a different root, though one of a similar meaning. But as we have in Fr. petit, beside (dial.) p’cho, p’quiéot, pétigné, there seems no reason for seeking a separate origin for the southern and northern forms.

Pigliare, ix. 56, etc., “to take,” and compare appigliarsi, vii. 15, etc., “to take hold,” also impigliare, v. 83, “to entangle,” and impigliarsi, v. 10, etc., “to be busy.” Fr. (late) piller, Sp. pillar. From pillare, a late form of pilare (v. subj. compilare; Comm. Cass. in note to xxiv. 55, writes: “meas rimas compíllare”). Hence subj. piglio, i. 49, etc., “a grasp,” also (in iii. 64), “mien, look.” (Cf. countenance, from continere.)

I have followed Diez, but his derivation hardly seems fully to explain all the senses of this curious word. Looking to the resemblance in meaning as well as in form of appigliare with apply, and impigliare with implicare and employ, and also to compigliare, “to embrace,” it is hard to avoid the belief that if not from the same root as Lat. pilare it has at least undergone some modification through a confusion with it. Pigliare being already in existence from another root, píacle might easily become pigliare. We might even go so far as to take pigliarsi, in x. 120, from the same. V. subj picchiare.

Piluccare, xxiv. 39, “to pick” (lit. used of grapes, etc.), Fr. éplucher. From Lat. plius, “a hair,” hence properly “to pull out hairs.” From the same are Fr. peluche and perruque, Sp. peluca. Germ. pflicken, Eng. pluck, are according to this view derived from the Rom. word. If it were the other way, we should have had piluccare in Italian. It may be added that in German words beginning with pf are usually foreign.

Poggia, xxxii. 117, “the starboard sheet,” or “brace.” From Gr. πόδιον, dim. of πός, in the sense of “sheet” (as Od. v. 260); Lat. pes. There seems no particular reason why it should be the starboard sheet, but that orsa (q. v.) was necessarily that on the port side.

Poggio, iii. 14, etc., “a hill.” Fr. puy, Sp. poyo (“a bench”). From Lat. podium, originally “the front bench in the amphitheatre” (Juvenal), “a balcony” (Pliny). In late Latin it got the sense of “a bank” (so bank and bench are forms of the same word), or “mound.” Hence appoggio, iii. 18, “a stay, support.” Fr. appui, Sp. apoyo.

Poltro, xxiv. 135, “timid” (?) Fr. pleure; also poltrone, Fr. Sp. poltron, Eng. poltroon. The original meaning seems to be “lazy”
(cf. Eng. to palter), and the word is probably from O. G. polstar, “a pillow,” Eng. bolster, whence also Italian boldrone, “a blanket,” and (dial.) polter, poltrona. [The old derivation from pollice trunco, even if it were etymologically admissible for poltrone, would clearly not account for the simple form.]

Predella, vi. 96, “a headstall,” usually predello. Fr. bride, Sp. bridá, Eng. bridle. From O. G. priddel, brittil. Connected with bridén, “to braid,” Icel. brigða, the bridle being braided or plaited. [Fr. bretelles would seem to be the same word, though Littré gives a different derivation.]

Rado, vii. 121, etc., “rare.” From Lat. rarus. For the change of r into d cf. chiedere from quaerere, proda from prora.

Ramogna, xi. 25. Perhaps from Lat. remus, “an oar.” Cf. Fr. rame, in the sense of “a convoy”—Littré. There can be no doubt of the meaning of the word, but its origin is obscure. It is curious that Diez has quite overlooked it.

Rampognare, xvi. 121, “to reprove.” Literally “to claw, tear,” from rampone, “a hook.” Is not this akin to Gr. ἀπεν, “a sickle”? Rampare, Fr. ramper, “to climb,” rampe (but probably not rempart), are kindred words; also Lat. rapere (cf. corripio in the sense of “to blame”), Germ. raffen, Eng. rape.

Rampolare, v. 16, xxvii. 42, “to spring up.” From Lat. repullulare (with n inserted for euphony, as n in renderre), “Rampollo significa nuovo ramo nato in sul vecchio”—Landino, to v. 16. So rampollo in Conv. iv. 21, and Sp. rampollo, “a cutting.” To xxvii. 42, however, Landino says: “diciamo rampollar l’acqua, quando surge da terra,” which looks as if there was a confusion with bullare. So Guido Guinicelli, “fonti d’acqua rampollavano.”

Rancura, x. 133, “an unpleasant feeling.” Fr. rancune, Sp. renzor, Eng. rancour. From late Lat. rancor, lit. “rancidness,” but used in the sense of “malice.” (Cf. putidus.)

Recare, vi. 6, etc., “to bring” (in xvi. 97, there seems to be a notion of “referring,” as if the word was thought to be compounded with re-); from O. G. recchén, modern rechen, “to stretch,” and so “hold forth, offer.” Eng. rack, Icel. rækk, “straight,” are cognate words.

Rincalzare, ix. 72, “to prop up,” “sustain.” Properly “to pile up the earth round a plant,” Fr. enchausser; from Lat. calcus, “a shoe.”

Roba, xiii. 61, “substance.” From O. G. roub, modern rǻb, GLOSSARY.

"booty, plunder." It is, of course, the same as Fr. robe, Sp. ropa, Eng. robe, but in these it is confined to the special sense of clothing, whereas in Italian it is often just equivalent to "stuff."

Rocca, xxxii. 148, "a tower." All commentators seem agreed in so understanding it, and if this be correct, it may mean, as Blanc says, a fortress among rocks; v. sub roccia. But may it not also be from the "castle" in chess, It. rocco, Fr. roc, Eng. rook; from the Persian name of the piece, rokh, "a camel"?

Roccia, iii. 47, etc. "a rock." Fr. roche. Perhaps from a supposed low Lat. rupsa, from rupes. In this case rocca, Fr. roc, Sp. roca, must be from another form, rupica. But the root is found in all Celtic languages, so the word may have its direct origin thence.

Rugiada, i. 121, etc., "dew." Fr. rosée, Sp. ruxada, rociada. From Lat. ros, through rosicus, whence we must suppose a verb, rosicare. The verb does not exist in Italian, but we have Fr. arroser, Sp. rociar, ruxar. The form of the Italian word suggests that it may have been borrowed from the Spanish.

Rudigo, ix. 98, "rough." From Lat. ruidus.—Pliny. This is the derivative given by Diez; but why should it not be from a Teutonic source—Germ. raunh, A. S. rih, Eng. rough? The meaning of Pliny's word is not certain, but if it be correctly interpreted, it is probably from the same root.

Sbarro, xxxiii. 42, "a hindrance." Perhaps immediately from O. G. sparre, mod. spierren, "to lock," but more probably formed from barra, Fr. barre, Eng. bar, of Celtic origin. (Hence embarrass.)

Scalappiarsi, xxi. 77, "to escape from a snare." From calappio, "a noose," properly "trap." This from an O. G. klappe = klappa, mod. klappo, "a flap or valve." Hence also chiappare. [But is it not rather from some root connected with A. S. clyppan, "to draw tight" (Eng. clip, "to embrace"), and still more remotely with Lat. laqueus, if we may suppose that to stand for g-laque-eus ?]

Scaltrire, xxvi. 3, "to instruct." Sp. (only in part) esclatrido, "cunning" (which is probably taken from the Italian). Diez derives it from sculpiturire, as if the original notion were "to hew a rough block into shape,” and thinks that calterire, “to gall,” may be the same word, with the s dropped. This is not satisfactory; and it seems better to accept Muratori’s suggestion of cauteriare (or -ire) for the latter word—(cf. calma, from καθα) —and understand scastrire as meaning primarily “to heal a sore.”

Scarso, x. 13, xiv. 80, xx. 16, “scant, niggard.” Fr. &chars (used of base money and shifting winds), Sp. escaso, Eng. scarce. According to Muratori, whom Diez follows, from low Lat. excerptus, for excerptus. I should be inclined rather to take it from a Teutonic root; that which gives Icel. skera (which used reflexively means “to refuse”) and skarðr, “diminished,” A. S. scēran, Eng. shear and short.

Scemare, vii. 66, etc., “to diminish.” O. Fr. semer. From low Lat. semare, literally “to halve” (probably with ex- prefixed). But may it not be rather from a supposed simare? We only find simus in the sense of “snub-nosed,” but it may very well have meant generally “stunted.” (The chief objection would be that long i seldom becomes e in Italian, but the vowel of a verb in Latin sometimes has a different quantity from that of its kindred substantive.)

Scempio (1), xii. 55, “an example, i.e. punishment.” From Lat. exemplum. The word had this meaning early, e.g. Ter. Eun. v. 4, ll. 24, 26.

Scempio (2), xii. 133, xvi. 55, “simple,” hence “separate.” From a low Lat. exsimplatus, formed from simplus = simplex.

Schemma, x. 126, “defence, screen.” O. Fr. escren, mod. écran; but these probably are from the English more immediately. From O.G. schirm, mod. schirm; whence verb scherman, “to fight” (cf. Gr. ἰμέροσια), and from this Fr. escrimer, “to fence,” Sp. esgrimir, and also probably scaramuccia, escarmouche, skirmish.

Schietto, i. 95, xiii. 8, “smooth.” From Goth. sithats, Icel. slír, Germ. schlecht, Eng. slight. [The original meaning is only preserved in German in the adverbs schlechtthin; schlechtweg; for the change in meaning of the adj. cf. schimm, Eng. slim.]

Sciogliere, ii. 89, etc., “to loose.” From exsolvere.—Diez. It is, however, not impossible that it may be from excoligere, as sceglire from ex-seliger. (For the softening of c cf. ciancun from quisque unus.
Glossary.

Note that sci- when followed by a, o, or u, almost invariably implies a Latin ex-.

Scoccare, vi. 130, "to go off, let off." From cocca, "the notch of the arrow," Fr. cocke, Eng. cock (of a gun). Perhaps of Celtic origin. Eng. cog appears to be the same word.

Scoglio, ii. 122, "the cast skin of a snake," also scoglia. From M. G. slåch, Eng. slough (? Icel. slög, "the entrails of fish"), connected with Gr. σκύλος, "a hide." This is, according to Curtius, quite distinct from σκυλός, Lat. spolium, from which Diez, following Dict. Crusc., wishes to derive the word. Vanzon says "quasi scaglia," which is hardly more satisfactory.

Scorgere, xvii. 18, xxi. 21, "to direct," sub. scorta, i. 21, etc. "an escort." Fr. escorte, Sp. escolta. From Lat. ex-corrigere. See accorgere.

Scorno, x. 33, "shame, scorn." From scornare. This from excornare, "to take the horns off." Chaucer's "the fesaunt scornor of the cocke by night" (Assembly of Foules), suggests a somewhat different original meaning.

Scotto, xxx. 144, "payment." Fr. écôt, Sp. escote. From low Lat. scatum, this from O. G. scaz ("then jungiston scaz" = "the uttermost farthing"), modern schats, Icel. skattir, Eng. scot and shot. [Mod. Germ. schoss looks very much like a corruption, due perhaps to the influence of the English word. In spite of the change of vowel the meanings of the Teutonic and Romance words are so similar that it seems hardly possible to doubt their connection.]

Senno, vi. 137, etc., "sense, wisdom." From O. G. sin, modern sinn. The word, which formerly existed in both Fr. and Sp. is now only represented by the Fr. forséni, "insane," formerly forséni, i.e. foris-sennatus.

Smagare (and dismagare), iii. 11, etc., "to weaken, undo." Sp. desmayar, Eng. dismay. Fr. only in sub. (obsolete) énou. From Rom. prefix dis- and O. G. magan, modern mögen, "to be able," Icel. meg, Eng. may. [Still better would be the transitive form, if such existed in Goth. or O. G. corresponding to Icel. magna, "to enable, strengthen." In one passage, xix. 20, it seems not improbable that Dante confused it with magus.

Smalto, viii. 114, "enamel." Fr. émail, Sp. esmalle. From O. G. smeltan, mod. schmelsen, Eng. smelt and melt. That this is the true derivation is pretty clear from the fact that smelti passed early into Icel. in the sense of "enamel."

Smarrire, i. 119, viii. 63, xix. 14, etc., "to make dim, bewilder," Glossary.

Fr. (part.) marri, "grieved" (obs.) Sp. marrar, "to go astray." From low Lat. marrire, this from Goth. marrjan, O. G. marran, Eng. mar. (The root is found in all Aryan languages, and appears in Gr. βρούς and μαπαλώ, Lat. mors and marcus, Goth. maurthr, Eng. murder, etc.)

Sobbarcarsi, vii. 135, "to undertake." Sp. sobarcar, "to carry under the arm." From Lat. brachium, through a supposed sub-brachicare. According to Bianchi and Post Gg. the notion is "to gird up the garments," but this seems unnecessary.

Soma, xi. 37, etc., "a burthen." Fr. somme (whence assommer), and sôme, Sp. salma and salma, Germ. saum (in saumthier, Eng. sumpter, and säumen). From low Lat. salma = sagma, Gr. σάγμα.

Sozzo, xvi. 13, "foul." Sp. sucio. From Lat. sucidus, properly of uncleaned wool with the grease in it.

Spada, viii. 26, etc., "a sword." Fr. épée, Sp. espada. From late Lat. spatha, "a blade, a broadsword," Gr. σθάθη (which also has this sense). It is not, however, impossible that spatha, in this sense, may be a Celtic word.

Spalla, viii. 42, etc., "a shoulder." Fr. épaule, Sp. espalda. From low Lat. spatula, "the shoulder-blade," dim. of spatha (and perhaps confused with scapula).

Spazzo, xxiii. 70. In this passage I take it to be used in the sense of the Lat. spatium, "a race-course," not in its more usual meaning of "ground or pavement."

Spagnere, iii 132, "to extinguish." From Lat. ex-pingere in the sense of "to paint out," but evidently confused with extinguere, if not with expendere. The part. spento may often be rendered by "spent."

Spia, xvi. 84, "a scout," verb espiare, xxvi. 36, "to search out." Fr. épier, Sp. espiar, Eng. spy, espy. From O. G. spehôn, mod. spähen, Icel. spá ("to prophesy"). Connected with Gr. ἱκονέω, Lat. spicio.

Spola, xxxi. 96, "a shuttle." Fr. espoûle, Sp. estolin. From O. G. spuolo, mod. spule, Eng. spool. Perhaps cognate with Gr. σφύρα. [It is curious, looking to the reading of Gg. given at the passage, and the explanation of it, to observe that Schiff is used in Germ. to denote a shuttle.]

Stancare, x. 19, "to weary." Identical with Fr. étancher, Sp. estancar, Eng. staunch. From Lat. stagnum, properly "to dam up water.” The transition of meaning is not very hard to follow from the idea of damming up to that of stopping the flow, hence the force of anything. Littre gives instances of the use of the Fr. word (which otherwise, like the Spanish and English, preserves the original meaning), as applied to horses in Cents. xiii. and xvi.

Strale, xxxi. 55, “an arrow.” From O. G. stråla, or M. G. strål, mod. strahl, “a ray.” Connected with star, and (perhaps) strew.

Storpio, xxv. 1 (perhaps “a hindrance,” but) probably for storpia, from storpiare (also stroppiare, and in xxxiii. 42 some read stroppio), “to cripple.” Fr. estrpier, Sp. estropiar (also tropiar, “to stumble”). Perhaps from extropiare. Cf. Germ. tropp, “a blockhead.”

Tagliare, xii. 97, “to cut.” Fr. tailler, Sp. tallar and tajar. From low Lat. taliare, this from talea, “a cutting of a plant,” also “a stake.” The original meaning is therefore “to cut wood,” as in Fr. tailis. Sub. taglio, xxxi. 3, “an edge.”

Tirare, xiv. 146, etc., “to draw.” Fr. tirer, Sp. tirar. From Goth. tairan, Germ. zerren, Eng. tear. In the earliest example given by Littre it is used of pulling out the hair in anger, subsequently all idea of violence passed out of the word.

Toccare, ii. 117, etc., “to touch.” Fr. toucher and toquer, Sp. tocar. According to Diez from O. G. súchén, mod. suchen, which appears to be a frequentative of siuhán, siuhén, “to draw.” There does not, however, appear to be any reason why it should not come from the simple verb. Goth. túhan, Icel. tjúga, Eng. tug. The original idea was evidently that of drawing; thus in O. Fr. se toucher de = se tirer de, and the mod. Fr. construction with d no doubt arises from this. [Fr. toque, “a cap,” is generally taken to be a Celtic word, but it may well be “something drawn on.”] Tosto, i. 17, etc., adv. “soon,” ii. 133, etc. adj., “quick.” Fr. tôt (only adv. except perhaps in the phrase, au plus tôt). From Lat. tostitus, part. of torro, hence literally “hot” (cf. calere; also the use of torrens for a rapid stream). [The derivation from tot-cito, which Diez suggests as an alternative, and Brachet adopts, is almost certainly wrong. Those who prefer it must find evidence that tot was ever used for tam, and must account for the adjectival use, which is quite as old as the adverbia[.]n]

Trapeolare, xxx. 88, "to filter through." Probably from pelo, "hair," Lat. pīlus, as if "to strain through a hair-sieve." Pelo, however, means also "a crack in a wall," so the word may mean "to trickle through cracks."

Trastullo, xiv. 93, "amusement," and vb. trastullare, xvi. 90.
From O. G. stulla, "a moment," probably connected with stunde.
Cf. Eng. pastime. For the Rom. prefix cf. smagare.

Travagliare, xxi. 4, "to weary, oppress." From travaglio, Fr.
travail, Sp. trabajo. Dante also has (Inf. vii. 20), the fem. travaglia. Diez considers that the simple form is found in Prov. travar, "to fetter, hamper." Fr. entraver, from trabs, "a beam," the idea being of a prisoner fastened to a log; cf. Sp. trabar. There is, however, Goth. trigo, " vexation," Icel. tregi, A. S. trega, which may be worth considering. It should be observed that in Dante, as in early French (where it is usually coupled with "douleur" or "peine"), the word has always a bad meaning; the sense of "work" is later. [In Par. xxxiii. 114 it seems to = "to change," and is perhaps a different word.]

Tregua, xiv. 136, xvii. 75, "truce, cessation." Fr. trève, Sp.
tregua. From low Lat. treuga, this from O. G. trīuwa, mod. true, Goth. trūgwa, akin to Icel. tryggja, A. S. trōw, Eng. thoth.

Trescare, x. 65, "to dance." Sp. triscar ("to stamp"). From Goth. thriska, Germ. dreschen, Eng. thresh.

Trovare, vi. 150, etc., "to find." Fr. trouver. From Lat. turbare, the original idea being "to disturb by seeking." This derivation is rendered almost certain by the fact that in its earliest use the word seems to have meant "to seek" as well as to find, and in some languages (e.g. Portuguese and Neapolitan), to have even retained the original meaning of "to disturb." The use of trovare in Sp. as = "to pervert the sense of words," seems also to arise from this, though it may be with a satirical allusion to the word in its sense of
"to write poetry."

138. Fr. tonner, Sp. tronar. In ix. 139 the word appears to mean merely "a tone," from Lat. tonus. This from Gr. ῥόος (reivos = "the tone or note of a string." In the other passages it is from tonare, "to thunder," which, though from the same root, is not directly formed from tonus, any more than Germ. donner from dehnen.